PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 107th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Tuesday, September 3, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Sovereign of this Nation, Lord of this Senate and source of strength for leaders, we turn to You for guidance for the intensely busy weeks ahead in this fall session. As we convene, it is difficult not to consider every issue in terms of the forthcoming elections. Our party differences often are sharply focused. And yet, the agenda before the Senate is made up of crucial matters for the good of America. Enable the Senators to think creatively, to speak clearly, and to vote with conviction. May they seek Your will, stay open to each other, and give our Nation an example of how leaders can be decisive without being divisive.

This morning we lift up to You the family of Senator JOE BIDEN whose father, Joseph R. Biden, Sr., passed away yesterday. Comfort them with Your peace that passes understanding as they walk through this difficult time. Watch over the entire Senate family and surround us with Your protections. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JACK REED led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 3, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REED assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, good morning. I welcome back every one of our very competent staff which has been away for 30 days.

Mr. President, this morning we are going to begin consideration of the homeland security legislation, H.R. 5005, with 7 hours of debate on the motion. The time will be divided between Senators LIEBERMAN and THOMPSON, and in opposition that time will be controlled by Senator BYRD.

At 12:30 today, we will proceed to executive session to vote on the confirmation of a judicial nomination. Following that vote, the Senate will recess until 2:15, as we do each Tuesday for party conferences. Debate on the motion will resume at 2:15.

All Senators should be alerted that in addition to the vote on the judicial nomination at 12:30 today, the Senate will vote on the motion to proceed to H.R. 5005 upon the expiration or yielding back of all time—somewhere around 6:15 this afternoon.

Today, we have a motion to proceed, as I have indicated. Tomorrow, we have the morning devoted to the Interior appropriations bill starting at 9:30. Then we will move again to homeland security.

Tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock, Vice President Mondale will be here for the Leader Lecture Series.

It will be a relatively short day tomorrow.

Then on Thursday, we will have full debate, which will include work on the Interior appropriations bill. We hope we can complete the Interior appropriations bill this week.

Hopefully, with permission of the minority, we can move to another appropriations bill.

We have one additional bill which the House passed, Treasury-Postal Service appropriations. That is something we have to do. There is a lot of work to do. Thursday will be our last legislative workday this week because Congress is going to New York on Friday.

As the leader announced, on each Monday there will be votes—some as early as noon. One week from Monday is a Jewish holiday. It is my understanding we will not work that day. At least that is the indication I got a short time ago in speaking with the leader.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S.J. RES. 43

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand that S.J. Res. 43 is at the desk due for its second reading.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask that S.J. Res. 43 be read for a second time, and then I object to any further proceedings at that time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the title of the bill for a second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 43) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to guarantee the right to use and recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag and the national motto.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been heard, the measure will be placed on the calendar.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002—MOTION TO PROCEED

CLOTURE MOTION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate the cloture motion, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to H.R. 5005, a bill to establish the Department of Homeland Defense.

Tom Daschle, Harry Reid, Zell Miller, Joseph Lieberman, Tim Johnson, Debbie Stabenow, John Edwards, Jon Corzine, Susan Collins, Robert F. Bennett, Trent Lott, Pete Domenici, Rick Santorum, Fred Thompson, Peter Fitzgerald, Jim Bunning.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, time for debate on the motion is limited to 7 hours to be equally divided between the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. THOMPSON, for the proponents, and the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, for the opponents, or their designees.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the two managers will be here very shortly. I ask unanimous consent that the time for the quorum be charged equally against both sides, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let me beg the Senator's forgiveness. Before he begins, I want to ask this earlier rather than later. May I ask a question with respect to the amendment?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Of course.

Mr. BYRD. Is the amendment that the distinguished Senator will offer as a substitute the amendment I have seen? Is that the amendment?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. In responding to the Senator from West Virginia, that is indeed the amendment. What is before the Senate now, as the Senator from West Virginia knows, is the House-passed bill. It is my intention, assuming the motion to proceed passes today, to offer as a substitute the legislation that was adopted by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee in July, which has been distributed to the Senator from West Virginia and others.

Mr. BYRD. May I ask the distinguished Senator, with great respect, does he have any suggestion as to how we will handle the time on quorum calls?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I appreciate the question. It was my hope we could agree that the time on the quorum calls be subtracted equally from each side. Is that agreeable to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BYRD. I hope it would not be. Once I begin, I don't plan to have any quorum calls. Yet, of course, at times it becomes necessary. When I do ask for a quorum call, I will expect that to be taken out of my time. I would not want to divide the time equally on quorum calls, I say with great respect.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. The Senator has that privilege, and I have no desire to limit debate. So let us just agree that quorum calls will remove time from the side that asks for the quorum call.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. I have one further question. In closing the debate, does the Senator have any particular way he wishes to proceed? I believe he would want to close the debate. If I might make a suggestion.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Please.

Mr. BYRD. I ask if I could go preceding the Senator and if the distinguished minority member, Mr. THOMPSON, could speak just prior to me. That would be my suggestion. However, if Senator THOMPSON wants to do this differently, I will accept that.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia. That order was exactly what I had in mind. I ask Senator THOMPSON if that is agreeable to him.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is most agreeable to me. I think that is the way to proceed.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Fine. So we will close the debate in the last half hour going from Senator THOMPSON, to Senator BYRD, to myself.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I will.

Mr. BYRD. May I say, I hope we will not confine our closing arguments to a half hour. As far as I am concerned, when we get to that point, perhaps we can wait until the last hour to close the arguments, or the last hour and a half, and Senator THOMPSON would proceed, and then the Senator from West Virginia, and then the distinguished manager of the bill, and that we not limit ourselves—the three of us—to the totality of 30 minutes.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Once again, Mr. President, that suggestion is agreeable to me. Debate, as the Senator from West Virginia knows, is limited to 3½ hours on each side. But some of this will depend on how many colleagues come to the floor to speak. Let us work together. I agree that we don't have to limit the time in which we go to closing arguments to the last half hour. We can work that out ourselves and take longer than that. That is fine.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I say I thank the distinguished Senator, the manager of the bill. I have only the very highest degree of respect for him, and I have only the highest degree of respect for the committee, and for his counterpart—if I may use that word—a very respected Senator, the Senator from Tennessee. I have great respect, and anything I say during this debate will be only with the desire in mind to contribute something that will reflect well upon this Senate in the days and years to come.

I have every belief that the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Tennessee approach the matter in the same spirit. I thank the Senators for yielding.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia for his graciousness. Of course, Senator THOMPSON and I return the respect the Senator kindly offered to us. This is a very significant debate. It goes to the heart of the security of the American people today, post September 11, and it is also, by my calculation, the largest reorganization of the Federal Government since the late 1940s. Therefore, the kind of debate in which I know the Senator from West Virginia intends to engage is very much in the public interest. I look forward to it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

September 11 is now one of the darkest days in American history because of the almost 3,000 innocent lives that were taken and because of the way in which the American people were jarred from the dream that we would experience a time of extended peace after our victory in the cold war. The attacks made against us on September 11 were not just vicious in their inhumanity and in the lives that were taken in tragic consequences, but also in the assault made by the terrorists on our very way of life, on our values.

We are a nation whose founders stated right in the original American document, the Declaration of Independence, that every citizen has the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and that right is the endowment of our Creator. Yet we were attacked on September 11 by a group that claimed to be acting in the name of God. Yet they took planes into buildings full of thousands of people without regard to the lives of those people, killing them only because they were Americans, acting in the name of God to kill almost 3,000 children of God—diverse and varied in age and demographics, as the American people are.

It is in that sense that I view September 11 as an attack on our way of life. It is why we have pulled together after that as united people to resist, to strike back at those who struck at us first, through our courageous and skillful military achieving a great victory in Afghanistan. We must continue, since Afghanistan was only the first battle in the war against terrorism, to search out and capture or destroy all the enemy that remains in this unprecedented war, unprecedented in so many ways because we cannot see the enemy on a battlefield, they are not on ships at sea, but they are out there living in the shadows, preparing to strike us again.

What this proposal is about, stated in the most direct way, is to diminish, hopefully eliminate, the vulnerabilities of which the terrorists took advantage to strike at us on September 11, so that they will never again be able to do that.

I am not one who views another September 11-type attack as inevitable. We are the strongest nation in the history of the world, militarily and economically. We are united by our shared values. We are a patriotic and innovative people, and if we marshal these strengths, we can make another September 11-type attack impossible, and that is the aim of the legislation our committee puts before the Senate today.

The urgent purpose of all three versions of homeland security that are in the discussion now—and I am speaking of the proposal by President Bush, the proposal passed by the House, and the one endorsed by the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate—is to meet the urgent post-September 11 security challenge we face, which is unprecedented, by consolidating the disparate Federal agencies and offices that deal with homeland security into a single Cabinet department under a strong, accountable Secretary.

In one sense, one might say the problem with the Federal Government's organization today with regard to homeland security is that a lot of people are involved in homeland security but nobody is in charge. The mission of this new Department that all three proposals would create is to spearhead the Federal Government's defense of the American people against terrorism on our home soil, working particularly with States, counties, cities, towns, and Native American tribes across the country and working with the private sector to improve their preparedness and response capabilities.

As the 1-year anniversary of September 11 approaches, the reconstruction of the Pentagon is almost complete, the field in Pennsylvania, to the casual eye, looks almost like any other field, and plans for the redevelopment of the World Trade Center site are already being actively discussed. But the reality is that the vulnerabilities the terrorists exploited on September 11 in America's homeland defense structure still exist. We are still at risk, and that is why we must urgently proceed to discuss, debate, and then adopt legislation creating a Department of Homeland Security.

The dark day of September 11 and the future it foretold are seared in our minds and our hearts. We must never stop feeling anger and outrage about what our enemies did to us. We must never stop mourning the 3,000 lives we lost. We must never stop honoring the legacy they left. We must never stop supporting the families whose loved ones were the first casualties of the war on terrorism. And we must never stop treasuring the freedoms and the opportunities that make this Nation truly the light it is to so many people around the world.

The single most important action we can take now as individuals and as a nation, in addition to continuing the military phase of the offensive war against terrorism, is to channel our sorrow, our outrage, our unity, our anxiety, and our pride into building better defenses at home.

This legislation is not a single-magic-bullet answer to our homeland security challenges—much more work needs to be done—but I am convinced it is a strong and necessary first step. It will provide the structure that can deliver the defense the American people deserve.

I thank President Bush for embracing the creation of a Department of Homeland Security and for the diligence with which he and his staff have worked through the details with members of our committee, with Members of the Senate, and with Members of the House. Amendments always highlight differences, but the reality is that President Bush and the majority of members of the Governmental Affairs Committee who reported out the legislation are in agreement on more than 90 percent of what this legislation provides. We stand broadly on common ground, even as we debate some of the remaining differences between us.

I also want to thank my colleagues in this Chamber for their contributions and cooperation across party lines for the building of this proposal. We have come a long way, and we must get to the end in this session. I particularly want to thank my ranking member, Senator THOMPSON, for his characteristic constructive and thoughtful contributions to this proposal, even when we have been in dissent. The least we can do for the American people and for Senator FRED THOMPSON is to pass this legislation while he is still a Senator, before he retires.

The President and Congress and the American people have made real progress since September 11. A successful military campaign in Afghanistan, creating the Office of Homeland Security, passing the USA Patriot Act, creating a Transportation Security Administration, beginning to reform the FBI—those are just a few of the significant steps we have taken forward together.

Federal employees are working very hard at their assigned tasks and working increasingly in cooperation with our State and local colleagues to keep the American people safe. We have to speak frankly about this as we begin the consideration of this legislation.

Our progress will hit a wall—in effect it has—if we do not reform the Federal Government's homeland security capabilities because the gains we have made in keeping America safe since September 11 have been, and will continue to be, in some sense despite the system, not because of it.

The system, the organization, is dispersed and in some ways it is dysfunctional. It needs to become coherent and consolidated, coordinated, to rise to the complex challenge of defeating 21st century terrorism in our homeland.

The 18 hearings we on the Governmental Affairs Committee have held since September 11 on this matter, and countless other hearings by so many other committees, have made the scope and depth of this disorganization and dysfunction clear.

To sum it up in the words of Stephen Flynn, senior fellow of national security studies at the Council on Foreign Relations, who testified before us on October 21 of last year:

We have built our defense and intelligence communities to fight an away game.

Now we must build them to fight at home and to win. Across our Government, we are dividing our strengths when we desperately need to be multiplying them. As the President acknowledged on June 6, the Office of Homeland Security, though ably headed by Gov. Tom Ridge, did not have the structural power to get the job done we need done. Indeed, the release on July 16 of the President's national strategy for homeland security, underlay the importance of creating a Department that can orchestrate the huge task ahead.

The status quo is simply unacceptable and we must rise to the occasion by organizing for the occasion. We must move from disorganization toward organization. When we pass this legislation, the American people, for the first time, must be able to look to a single Federal agency that will take the lead in the homeland fight against terrorism and to hold that agency accountable for accomplishing what is Government's first responsibility, and that is to provide, as the Constitution says, for the common defense. And now that means the defense of the American people at home.

The Department we will create will be led by a Presidentially appointed, Senate-confirmed Secretary. It would be comprised of six directorates that, taken together, would accomplish its missions and goals. Let me briefly describe them now.

First is intelligence. I put that first intentionally because we cannot prevent attacks, nor can we adequately prepare to protect ourselves or respond if we cannot first detect the danger. This legislation would establish a strong intelligence division to receive all terrorism-related intelligence from Federal, State, and local authorities; from human intelligence and signal intelligence; from closed and open sources; from the FBI and the CIA, including foreign intelligence analysis from the Director of Central Intelligence's Counterterrorism Center. Then it would have the authority to fuse that all in a single place. This would be the one place—which does not exist in our Government now—where all the proverbial dots could be connected as they were not because of existing barriers to sharing information prior to September 11. Indeed, the new Department will not just receive and analyze intelligence collected from other agencies; it will contain agencies within itself that collect intelligence and will share it and send it up to this directorate of intelligence. I am speaking of the Customs Service, of Immigration, of the Coast Guard, of the Transportation Security Agency, all examples. All of that will be fed into the same stream.

I want to stress that stream will include information from State and local law enforcers who we acknowledge now are the first responders, as we saw on September 11.

If this directorate of intelligence is working well, State and local law enforcers can become first preventers. They are hundreds of thousands of eyes out across America who can share information, who can help us detect patterns and work with law enforcement to prevent any future attacks against America. This precise capability exists nowhere in Government and would be designed to complement the Director of Central Intelligence's Counterterrorism Center and the capabilities of other intelligence and law enforcement agencies such as the FBI.

This directorate would not collect intelligence; it would receive it and analyze it. It would mean all information related to terrorist threats on American soil would, for the first time in our history, come together in this one place. Perhaps it could be called a hear-all-evil and see-all-evil office. That is precisely what we need to prevent the recurrence of the disastrous disconnects that left the puzzle pieces of the September 11 plot laying scattered throughout our Government, when they should have been together in one box so they could have been assembled. That is what this division of intelligence would do.

The second, critical infrastructure: We can expect terrorists to try to hurt us by destroying or disrupting our infrastructure. What do we mean by that? Well, our water and agricultural delivery systems, our energy grids, our information technology networks, our transportation systems, our ports and airports, and more. Eighty-five percent of our infrastructure is actually owned and operated by the private sector. That is the nervous system, the respiratory system, the circulatory system of our society. Infrastructure, however, is not the only target. Indeed, attacks by weapons of mass destruction have up until now been designed largely to destroy people, not to damage our infrastructure. In fact, of course, the attacks on September 11 were not against infrastructure in the way in which that term has normally been meant. They were against the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. But infrastructure is a big, vulnerable, and complex target.

Today, responsibility for working with the private sector to safeguard it is spread thin throughout the Federal bureaucracy. This directorate would mesh critical infrastructure protection programs now residing in five different Federal agencies, including the Department of Energy, the Department of Commerce, and the General Services Administration.

Third is a border and transportation protection directorate. Every potential source of danger that is not already inside our country must come in through our ports or airports or over our borders. Once danger gets inside, it is much harder to root out. So to effectively interdict, interrupt, and intercept terrorists and the weapons of toxic materials or mass destruction they seek to smuggle in, this directorate would bring together our Customs Service, the border quarantine inspectors of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture, the recently created Transportation Security Administration, and the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.

The Coast Guard will also be transferred to the new Department reporting directly to the Director of Homeland Security and will work closely with all other authorities on our waterways, in our ports, and at our borders.

Fourth is science and technology. Now terrorists will try to turn chemistry, biology, and technology against us in untraditional and inhumane ways. So we are challenged to marshal our superior technological talents to preempt them and protect our people.

This science and technology directorate is intended to leverage America's advantage on this front, creating a lean entity to manage and coordinate innovative homeland security research and development and to spearhead rapid technology transaction and deployment. It would be armed with an array of mechanisms to catalyze and harness the enormous scientific and technological potential residing within our Government, within our private sector, and within our university communities.

One of the key features of this directorate will be a homeland security version of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, DARPA, which has sparked the development of Revolutionary Warfighting Tools for our military throughout the cold war and now into the post-cold-war world, the very tools and systems and weapons that enabled our courageous and skillful fighting forces to terrify and defeat the Taliban in Afghanistan so brilliantly and to disrupt the al-Qaida network.

Of course, DARPA has also spun off from its technologies to create some of the most remarkable commercial and civilian technologies that characterize our age, including the Internet.

It is our hope and prayer that this new Department, which we would like to call SARPA, the Security Advanced Research Projects Agency, will do the same for our homeland security and for our economy.

Fifth, emergency preparedness and response: After September 11, we all have an obligation to think about and to prepare ourselves for the unthinkable, including attacks with chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear weapons at home. This directorate with the Federal Emergency Management Agency at its core will combine and integrate the strengths of a number of Federal agencies and offices responsible for dispensing critical vaccines and medicines for training local and State officials in emergency readiness, and for reacting to and helping the American people recover from the attacks that we hope and pray and will work to deter, but we must be ready to respond.

Six is immigration. America's positive fundamental heritage of immigration, central to our character as a country of opportunity and responsibility and community, must be honored. But at the same time, after September 11 we have to look with new clarity and intensity at illegal immigration as well as how to better screen those who come to this country legally and may stay beyond the time allowed.

Our proposal brings the troubled Immigration and Naturalization Service into the Department of Homeland Security and places those functions in a separate division within it. Then, to undo internal conflicts in the agency and give each set of functions the concerted attention it deserves, we propose to split the directorate into two distinct but closely linked bureaus as called for in the bipartisan INS restructuring plan of our colleagues, Senator KENNEDY and Senator BROWNBACK. This is a long overdue major reorganization of a very troubled agency.

We also require the Secretary to establish a border security working group comprised of himself, working with the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security and the Under Secretary for Immigration Affairs. Our goal is to make passage more efficient and orderly for most people and goods crossing the border while at the same time raising our capacity to identify and stop dangerous people and things from entering America.

Those are the six core directorates which we see as six spokes of the wheel. Where they meet at the axis is where our security at home comes together.

There are a few important pieces of this legislation I want to describe additionally. As we need to keep reiterating, this is not solely a Federal responsibility or a Federal fight in the war against terrorism, it is a national responsibility and a national fight, with the front lines being drawn in our cities and towns all across America. One need only look at the long list of fallen heroes of September 11 to understand that. That is why we in Washington must do a far better job of creating and sustaining potent partnerships with States and localities which will be facilitated, I am confident, through the new Department. We are creating an Office of State and Local Government Coordination. This office is designed to assess and advocate for the resources needed by State and local governments all across the country.

In fact, there is separate legislation, quite appropriate, recommending the creation of a homeland security block grant. The initial amount proposed is $3.5 billion for fiscal year 2003.

I know from having spoken to the Presiding Officer, speaking to the local responders and first preventers, they are already spending significant funds to carry out the wider range of homeland security responsibilities they have. This is a national problem, and they are playing a large role in responding. We have to give them the resources, the funds, to make that possible. In fact, to meet the pressing need for well-trained firefighters in our communities, our legislation includes an amendment offered by Senators CARNAHAN and COLLINS that points Federal assistance to local communities nationwide, patterned on the very successful COPS program adopted during the Clinton administration. This program for firefighters would enable the hiring of as many as 10,000 additional firefighters per year.

The Office of State and Local Government Coordination would also be strengthened with the help of an amendment offered by Senators CARPER and COLLINS providing a number of new mechanisms, including the creation of liaison positions in each State in the country, a liaison with the new Department of Homeland Security to ensure close and constant coordination between the Federal Government and the first responders, first preventers, who are our principal partners in this solemn task.

Recognizing the need to ensure that fundamental American freedoms are not curbed as we build a more secure society, our legislation also creates positions of civil rights officer and privacy officer, as well as a designated officer under the inspector general within the new Department. Those positions will provide the Secretary valuable guidance to help craft effective policies and practices that don't compromise individual rights, and ensure there is an effective avenue for receiving complaints and investigating them. Outside of this Department, within the White House, the amendment would create another entity, a National Office for Combating Terrorism. Here I want to give substantial credit to the Senator from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM, who has worked very hard with Members of both parties, in this Chamber and the other body, to fashion this proposal.

We cannot fail to recognize that the fight against terrorism is, by definition, larger than what will be done by this new Department of Homeland Security. It will involve our military and intelligence communities separately, our diplomatic services, our law enforcement agencies, our international economic agencies, and many others. It seems to me and the committee that it is therefore still necessary to have a policy architect in the White House who can design and build the overriding antiterrorism strategy for and with the President, and to coordinate the implementation of that strategy that will necessarily go beyond the Department of Homeland Security.

The director of this office will work, of course, with the Homeland Security Secretary to develop the national strategy for combating terrorism and the homeland security response. With budget certification authority, the director of this White House office will be able to make sure all the budgets that make up our antiterrorism national strategy fit together smoothly. And because of the critical nature of this job, according to our legislation, the director would be confirmed by the Senate, making him or her accountable to the Congress and to the people of the United States.

That is an overview of our legislation as will be contained in the amendment I look forward to putting before the Senate this evening, after, hopefully, we have adopted the motion to proceed. I am proud that on the guts, on the fundamentals, of this proposal we in the Senate are near unified on this attempt to form, in a very modern context, what our Founders described as "a more perfect Union."

Winston Churchill once said:

A pessimist sees the difficulty in every opportunity; an optimist sees the opportunity in every difficulty.

I think only a big pessimist would see the difficulty in the opportunity this Department would create to secure our people and our homeland. We have crafted here a fundamentally optimistic and I think realistic answer to the homeland security challenges we face—seeing opportunity, not difficulty. As we go forward with amendments and discussion and votes on the remaining differences, I hope and believe that optimism will prevail and constructive action will result. Together, united across party lines, as it has been over and over again throughout history, our great country, which today faces a challenge that is unprecedented, will give the response we are called on to give—which is equally unprecedented.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, it is indeed true that today we begin consideration of the most significant reorganization of the executive branch in over 50 years. Not since the creation of the Department of Defense and the creation of the national intelligence apparatus in the National Security Act of 1947 has the Senate considered such a massive restructuring of Federal agencies.

Just as World War II and the start of the cold war demonstrated the need to reorganize our defense and intelligence establishment, the terrorist attacks of September 11 demonstrate the need to reorganize our homeland security establishment to address the threat of terrorism and other types of asymmetric warfare against our country and against our people.

I start by acknowledging and thanking Senator LIEBERMAN, the manager of the bill, for his leadership on this issue. He was an early supporter of legislation to reorganize the executive branch to confront emerging threats against our country. He recognized what needed to be done and has worked hard to get us to the point where we are today.

While we have some disagreements in some important areas, in the end we both believe that the creation of a new Department of Homeland Security is needed to make this country safe. Our Nation and the Senate also owe a debt of gratitude to the Members of the Hart-Rudman and Gilmore Commissions. Recommendations from both commissions have contributed greatly to our efforts. Indeed, the proposal before us owes much to the insight and thoughtful recommendations of our former colleagues, Senators Gary Hart and Warren Rudman.

This legislation is one of the centerpieces of our country's overall homeland security strategy. What we do here will have lasting effects on our Nation. It will certainly outlive us. We should not shy away from the fact that while some bureaucracies will be reduced and eliminated, we will be creating a large new bureaucracy with new leadership, a new mission, and a new culture. However, even advocates of smaller Government realize it is a mission that is vital to the security of this Nation, the most important responsibility of this or any other government and one of the basic responsibilities outlined for the National Government by the framers of our Constitution. That is what we are about today.

I think it is appropriate perhaps to take a moment to reflect on how we got here. It is obvious to all that in the last several years we have undergone a revolution in the world in terms of the advances of modern technology. The same thing has happened with regard to transportation. We have also seen the emerging of a brand of religious radicalism that has infected certain parts of our world. We have seen the merging of those factors together, now, so that a small band of people, a small group of people, or even individuals on the other side of the world can wreak tremendous damage to our homeland.

It is a different world we live in today, and we must have different means of dealing with it. We have seen attacks on us over the last several years that have become more and more indicative of the kind of world we can expect in the future: The Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia, the original World Trade Center bombing, our embassies have been attacked, the U.S.S. Cole has been attacked. There have been other attempts that have failed because of the intelligence we were able to obtain. Attacks have been thwarted.

We have seen over the last few years, through our committee hearings and through reports of the GAO and other governmental entities, a rising pattern of capabilities, in terms not only of terrorism but of rogue nation-states and their increasing ability to deliver weapons of mass destruction, to develop those weapons of mass destruction, and to have the missile capability and other capabilities of delivering those for thousands and thousands of miles.

We have seen intelligence reports reminding us from time to time that this is what is going on out there.

We have not paid as much attention to that in times past as we should have. When we look back with the vision we have now and see the attacks that have come upon us around the world, attacks on our interests and our people, coupled with the intelligence information we were getting here in our own Congress, we should have been able to see, as some of us have seen, that there was a developing pattern out there that needed to be addressed by the Congress.

One of the good things that comes from such a tragedy under which we are now laboring is that it does finally focus our attention and allows us to do some things we should have done some time ago. It is a terrible price to pay in order to get us here, but we are here now and we should take advantage of that opportunity.

How do we react to something like September 11? We react by coming together, as the American people have. We react by being strong militarily and having the kind of leadership that we have to carry out the necessary operations overseas. We are doing that. The President said in the very beginning that it was going to be a long, tough road. Indeed, it is proving to be. It doesn't take a whole lot of effort for people to rally right after an attack. But it is going to take something special from the American people to have the stick-to-itiveness, and to have the stamina it is going to take, over a long period of time, for us to do what we are in the midst of doing now militarily.

We also react by changing our priorities. We cannot continue, in the Congress of the United States, in terms of budgetary matters, for example, to act as if these are normal times. We cannot have guns and butter at all times. We cannot have our cake and eat it, too. We have to prioritize now to deal with this threat that we have to our Nation.

Finally, the other important thing we can do is the one we are dealing with here today, this week, and days hereafter, and that is addressing and improving the institutions we have in our Government to deal with such matters and specifically the new threat we face.

We have seen—Senator LIEBERMAN and I—especially in the Governmental Affairs Committee over the last several years, an increasing array of problems that our Government has. There have been problems in management. There have been problems in trying to develop information technology that the private sector already has up and running. We have spent billions and billions of dollars and still have difficulty in getting that right and integrating those systems into our governmental operations.

We have financial management difficulties. We literally cannot pass an audit as a Government. We lose things and misplace things such as military equipment and other troubling things such as that. We have human capital problems. Half our workforce is going to be eligible for retirement before long. We do not have what we should have, in terms of ability to recruit, ability to retain, ability to keep the people we need and not keep the people we do not need, and pay the ones we need to pay for these high-tech jobs—jobs that are so highly paid out in the private sector—to do the things we have to do in Government now.

All of this presents a real problem to us, as a government, a Government-wide problem that has been growing—and growing all too silently out there—and without us doing too much about it.

The GAO reminds us every year that the same agencies year after year appear on the high-risk list. That is the list that is compiled, as you know, on a yearly basis to lay out the agencies that are most susceptible to waste, fraud, abuse, overlap, duplication, and inefficiencies. The same agencies appear year after year. Some of those agencies are the ones being brought into this homeland security bill.

We can't afford, as we create this new Department, to incorporate the same kinds of problems that we are seeing government-wide because the stakes are too great. It is not just a matter of wasting a few billion dollars of the taxpayers' money; it is a matter that could literally be life and death. This is what this bill is all about. This is why Senator LIEBERMAN took the initiative. This is why the President decided, once the strategic view was presented to him by the people he had commissioned to look at all of this, that a homeland security approach was needed, and that the 22 agencies out there needed to be pulled together into one cohesive entity that could work to make our country safer.

Certainly, there are very important areas. I will not go over all of them. Senator LIEBERMAN has done that.

But border security, for example, has never made any sense when we have people crossing borders, when goods cross the borders, and when plant life crosses the borders—all of which can be dangerous to the American people. They can cross them by water, they can cross the borders by air, they can cross the borders by highways. All of those things are just different aspects of the same problem. It all has to do essentially with border security. It has never made any sense to have all of this dispersed throughout Government.

What the President does and what the committee bill does is to pull those in. We have different ways of doing it. We will have an opportunity to discuss those in more detail as we proceed, but it gets its arms around the border security problem.

A lot of experts will say if you can do much better on the border problem, you can do better in the intelligence area, then you have gone a long way toward solving the problem.

In the intelligence area, the President's approach is to have an intelligence entity that will allow us to protect our infrastructure. As you know, our infrastructure is elaborate, far-flung, and complex. Almost all of it is in private hands. It is an extremely difficult problem to address and to get our arms around and to protect. We can never be totally protected at all times in all ways. It is going to require a great deal of attention and expenditure of money by State, local, and Federal Government over years to come.

We are going to have to address the vulnerabilities that we have. The President's approach would set up a system to assess those vulnerabilities in order to protect those infrastructures. The committee's approach is a broader approach. We will have an opportunity to discuss that.

I have concern about this broader approach because I don't think we can address the difficulties with the intelligence community in this bill and give it to a sub-Cabinet officer to have authority to pull all the dots together and all the things that need to be done in the intelligence community. We have seen, goodness knows, over the last several months and few years the difficulties we have in those areas of collecting intelligence, analyzing intelligence, and disseminating intelligence properly. That, to me, is a very important area that is going to have to be led by the President. It is going to have to be done by the administration. I view that as somewhat separate from the homeland security effort. But we can never mesh our entire intelligence community into this new Department.

The analyses that we are going to need for the Homeland Security Department are also needed by these various intelligence communities.

These are legitimate differences of view and approach that we will have an opportunity to discuss as we proceed. But we all agree that we, No. 1, must do much better in terms of our intelligence community and capabilities government-wide; secondly, this new entity must have some new intelligence entity to assist it to do what we properly decide that it ought to be doing. We will have an opportunity to discuss that in some more detail.

I think as we proceed we can flesh this legislation out and we can make it even better than it is. Senator LIEBERMAN is correct. I think there are many things we have basic agreement on here on a bipartisan basis. There are some serious differences of view on some important areas—differences the majority of the committee took versus what the President wishes to do. I think in these times the President must be given some leeway. It is going to be a long time before we put the final period to the last sentence of this legislation. I think it will be changed, as many other pieces of legislation dealing with the Department of Defense and the Transportation Department and others have changed over the years. I think there will be amendments and changes as we go forward. But it is important that we get off on the right foot.

It is important, for example, that we give the new Department the management tools it needs. I have mentioned some of the problems we have traditionally with Government and the fact that we can't afford to bring those problems into the new Department. We can't expect to keep doing things the same old way and get different results.

We don't want those inefficiencies, those overlaps, duplications, and waste, lost items, and things such as that, to follow us into the Department of Homeland Security. We can't have that happen. It won't work.

What is the answer? The answer is to give the new Department sufficient management flexibility in order to address these issues. We have recognized this need in times past. We have given this flexibility in terms of hiring and firing and managing and compensating. Most of it has to do with compensation. A lot of people will say this is anti-employee or union-busting or what not. It has nothing to do with that. Various agencies and the GAO came to us. The IRS came to us. The FAA came to us. The Transportation Security Administration came to us. They all came to us and said: Look, we either have special circumstances or we have special problems and we need some additional tools to deal with that. We need the right people in the right place to deal with those matters.

In every one of those instances which I mentioned, Congress gave it to them. Congress gave them additional flexibilities that are not within the body of title V because we perceived those needs to be exactly as they were described to us.

Now we are pulling 22 agencies together—some of them, quite frankly, already dysfunctional—and giving out these new responsibilities. We talk about how important it is to the new Department.

My question is, If we are going to give these flexibilities to these other agencies, my goodness, why not this one, of all agencies or all departments?

The President's national security authority must be preserved. We have significant disagreement with regard to whether the traditional authority that Presidents have had since President Jimmy Carter in the national security area in terms of the justifiable need to activate collective bargaining agreements with particular entities at particular times, for good reason. Presidents have used this authority judiciously. As far as I know, there has never really been a problem with it.

This bill, as written, would take a step backwards from that authority of the President. I don't think it is fair in these times, of all times, to do that.

On the issue of the White House staff, should we force on the President a Senate-confirmed person in that position when he says he is creating a new Department and a new Secretary with all of this elaborate mechanism, and he wants his personal person—some people make the analogy with the National Security Council, for example, that it is not Senate confirmed—inside the White House working for him?

I assume, as Mr. Ridge is doing today, should we not give the President that? I believe so, after a sound intelligence approach, as I mentioned earlier, with not too many directorates, and not making this more elaborate and complex than we should.

Those are issues that we have. I think they are legitimate. I think they are important. They will be the subject of amendments as we proceed.

But, again, we do not want to look at a glass that is almost full and say that it is almost empty, because it is not. We agree on many, many important fundamental aspects. I think it is our job to get about the consideration of it, and to improve it, to discuss these important issues and differences that we have, and come to a conclusion that is going to achieve what we are all striving for; that is, a safer United States of America.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Tennessee for his very thoughtful statement. It has been a pleasure to work with him on the Governmental Affairs Committee, both when he led the committee and in the time that I have. I look forward to working with him in the weeks ahead to achieve what we all want to achieve, notwithstanding some differences that we have today, which is to secure the future of the American people here at home.

I know that the intention was that Senator BYRD would speak next. He is not on the floor at the moment. I note the presence of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would ask that the Senator from Texas be given as much time—

Mr. GRAMM. Why don't I take up to 10 minutes. Every time I have ever heard anybody say they will not use it, they talk more. But certainly everything I would want to say or should say or am competent to say I can say in 10 minutes.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Very well. Then it would be our understanding, after the Senator from Texas has completed his statement, that Senator BYRD will be recognized.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I will withhold for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I greatly appreciate my friend from Texas withholding. He has always been very courteous. Today is no different than any other time.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session, today, at 12:30 p.m. to consider Executive Calendar No. 962, Terrence McVerry, to be a United States District Judge; that the Senate immediately vote on confirmation of the nomination, that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, any statements thereon be printed in the RECORD, with the preceding all occurring without any intervening action or debate, and that upon the disposition of the nomination, the Senate resume legislative session and stand in recess until 2:15 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to request the yeas and nays on the nomination at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I do, therefore, ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, whenever a bill comes to the floor from a committee, obviously, a lot of people have had an opportunity to have an input in it. It is always easy for people who do not serve on that committee to stand on the outside and jeer and throw rocks through the windows. And we are going to have a long debate. I think this bill is going to change dramatically. So rather than spending my time being critical of the product, I would like to just talk about some basic principles, sort of where I am coming from and what I hope can happen.

First of all, when September 11 occurred, it sort of awakened the country to a threat we always knew was there. But there is nothing like seeing your fellow countrymen suffer to focus the mind on a challenge that too often we chose to pretend did not exist. I think we all concluded, in the wake of September 11, that our country had changed, perhaps forever. Part of that change had to do with coming up with an effective response.

Free societies are vulnerable to terrorist attacks. There is nothing we can do about that since we are going to remain a free society.

The President, who has the responsibility under the Constitution, as Commander in Chief, to defend the homeland, spent time and effort in getting together the best people, at least in his mind, that he could assemble, and he came up with a plan. That plan involved bringing all or part of 22 agencies together in a new Homeland Security Department.

I know there are many people who have many different views, and that is what makes democracy strong. But I would like to begin with the point that the one person who has the constitutional responsibility, the one person who has access to more information than anybody else in our society, made a proposal; and that is the President's proposal.

In my mind, under these circumstances, and in this clear and present danger that we face, I believe—no blank check, no guarantee we are going to do it just as the President wants it—we ought to bend over backwards to try to accommodate the man who has the constitutional responsibility and is ultimately going to be given the credit or the blame by the American people based on what happens.

The President primarily asked for three things. One, he wanted flexibility in reorganizing these Departments. The flexibility wanted was substantial, but it was not without precedent. We had given similar flexibility to the Department of Energy, which was created from other Departments. We had given similar flexibility to the Department of Education, which was created in part by transfer and part by creation. Yet, remarkably, the bill that is before us denies the President the same flexibility that the President had when the Departments of Energy and Education were created.

Now, energy is important, especially if you are in an energy crisis. Education is always important. But is there anybody who really believes the crisis we face is so unimportant that President Bush should not have the same powers in setting up the Department of Homeland Security that the President had in setting up the Department of Energy? I do not think many people take that position, but we have a problem in that the bill before us takes that position. In my mind, that has to be fixed.

I understand reasonable people with the same facts are prone to disagree, but, as I look at this first request of the President, that he be given enhanced flexibility, not dissimilar to what we had with the Department of Energy and the Department of Education, to me, that is pretty close to a no-brainer that the President ought to have that flexibility.

The second request is that the President have the power, based on national security, to override labor agreements. Now, that sounds like a pretty dramatic power. In fact, the way opponents normally talk about it, it is basically giving the President the power to eliminate collective bargaining. In my mind, nothing could be further from the truth. All this power does is gives the President the power to set aside elements of collective bargaining when national security is involved.

Interestingly enough, the power the President sought he has under existing law. The President was simply asking for an affirmation of existing power. But, remarkably, in the wake of 9/11, not only did the committee not reaffirm this existing power but they took power away from the President in saying that whereas today, whereas on September 11, or September 10, the President could have waived collective bargaining agreements for national security purposes, under this bill he would not be able to do that. But the prohibition would apply only to the Department of Homeland Security.

I submit there is always room for disagreement, there is always room for some negotiation in trying to understand what other people think, but, to me, it is incomprehensible and absolutely unacceptable that we should be setting up a Department of Homeland Security and at the same time take away power the President has under existing law to take action based on national security concerns.

The provision taking away the President's national security powers simply does not fit in this bill. I do not think it fits in any bill. But in a bill that is trying to respond to 9/11, it clearly does not fit and cannot be accepted and will never be accepted. Clearly, that is something that has to be fixed.

Let me give you some examples. We currently have labor contracts negotiated with Government employee labor unions that prohibit the stationing of Border Patrol in areas that do not have laundries, that do not have access to personal services. There is a long list of things that were written.

Now, in normal circumstances, where you have people trying to lead a quality life like everybody else, you can understand those things. The ability to take your clothes to the drycleaners is pretty important when you are wearing uniforms that require drycleaning. But in an emergency circumstance, do we really not want to have the power to waive that collective bargaining agreement?

Another thing that has constantly driven me crazy, being in a border State—a huge border—with Mexico, is that trying to get the Border Patrol, INS, and Customs all to work together, trying to get them to cross-train so that people can perform various functions, is like trying to get them to use the same toothbrush. In fact, President Clinton's National Security Adviser talked about his frustration in dealing with the INS and Customs and the unwillingness of one agency to open the trunk in working with another agency.

Now, look, I understand work rules. I admit I am probably less sympathetic to them than most other people. I think if you sign onto a job, whatever the job requires, within the limits of human dignity, you ought to be willing to do. I don't understand negotiating about who pushes what button or who opens what trunk. To me that seems silly. I am not very sympathetic to it. But when we are dealing with national security concerns, when the lives of our fellow citizens are at stake, we cannot put up with that business.

So all the President is asking for is the power to set aside those kinds of agreements in dealing with national security. It is not a question of being anti-union, it is a question of having concerns that override collective bargaining. We don't have collective bargaining for the Marines because they are about very serious, life-threatening circumstances and tasks. In dealing with homeland security, we are dealing with exactly those kinds of circumstances.

Finally, the President's proposal asks for personnel flexibility—the ability to put the right person in the right position at the right time, without waiting for the normal 6 months, and the right to transfer people who are incompetent, and the right to fire people.

I understand collective bargaining, and I understand writing in requirements of how the personnel system works. I understand trying to prevent people from being arbitrary and capricious. But the bottom line is, if we are trying to fight and win this war on terrorism, we need to have the ability to hire, fire, and promote based on merit in those agencies that are involved. I will give you two examples.

A woman FBI agent sends a cable to the home office basically saying that maybe we ought to be concerned about people with terrorist connections who are taking flight training and are focusing on flying planes but not landing them. That actually happened. In the whole process of trying to absorb massive amounts of information with conflicting jurisdiction, nobody ever responded to it. But don't you think we ought to promote that woman? Don't you think we ought to promote her out of grade and reward her—not only to reward the fact that she was paying attention to her business, she was alert to a potential problem that, God knows, we wish we had been alerted to, and we want to send a signal to others in the FBI and other agencies that if you are doing a good job, we are going to reward you.

On the negative side—and I don't want to belabor it because I don't know the circumstances and I am not at INS. I don't know the individual life stories of the people involved or the problems they had or the bureaucracy they faced. But, look, when we granted visas to terrorists who had their picture on every television screen in the world, whose names are on the front page of every newspaper in America because they had killed over 3,000 of our citizens, and then weeks later we processed a visa request for these brutal terrorist/murderers, maybe somebody should have been fired. Maybe somebody should have been transferred.

I know that theoretically in the Federal Government you can fire people, but the reality is that it is virtually impossible. As everybody in the Senate knows, fewer than 1 percent of people who are found to be doing totally unsatisfactory work end up being fired in the Federal Government, and 80 percent of them, because of the momentum of the seniority system, end up getting raises after they have been deemed to be doing failing work.

In the Department of Homeland Security, where we are dealing with people's lives, we need the flexibility to promote and reward. And, quite frankly, despite all the protests from the labor unions, every time I talk to people in Government agencies who would be affected, they like this flexibility, they like rewarding merit, they believe they would benefit and thrive in this system.

I will conclude by simply saying this: The President is not saying do it my way or forget it. I think the President has been and will be flexible in terms of trying to work out an agreement. I think there is room for flexibility on the whole funding issue and reprogramming and the rights of the legislative branch. But when you get down to the ability to reorganize, the President is not going to accept a bill that gives him less power in the name of national security than the President had when we created the Department of Energy. He is not going to do that, and he should not do it. There is no possibility that the President is going to accept a bill that takes away emergency powers that he has today to waive collective bargaining agreements in a bill that claims to enhance the President's power to deal with national security.

Finally, we gave flexibility on personnel under the FAA reorganization bill, under the IRS reorganization bill, and under the Transportation Security Administration reorganization bill. Yet in a bill trying to deal with homeland security, do we think it is less important than the FAA, or the IRS, or the Transportation Security Administration? Well, obviously, if you look at this bill, we do. So I don't think it is productive for this to degenerate into any kind of partisan battle.

But the problem is, this is a bill that does not do the job. This is a bill that we would be better off—if it were adopted in its current form—not having. The President is not going to accept this bill, and I think we have reached the moment on a critical issue where we need simply to promote a bipartisan solution, work out these agreements, give the President these three powers he wants, work something out on the appropriations issue for enhanced reprogramming and a partnership, and preserve the ability of Congress to control the purse.

I think the President, for every one problem he will have with money, will have 100 problems dealing with reorganization and personnel flexibility.

I am hopeful we can work something out. We are going to be offering a series of amendments. I assume at the end we will offer a substitute. I hope that substitute will be broadly supported. Senator MILLER and I, along with almost 40 of our colleagues, have introduced the President's bill because we wanted to try to promote a compromise moving in the President's direction.

I thank Senator THOMPSON for his leadership on this issue. As I have followed what he has had to say, there is not any issue on which I have a substantive disagreement with him. I look forward to following his leadership as we work out these three key issues, but these issues have to be dealt with. There cannot be a bill that does not give the President reorganization flexibility, the ability to override collective bargaining agreements in the name of national security and personnel flexibility. Denying these three powers simply is a denial of common sense and a denial of the crisis as we all know it exists, and the bill has to be changed.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the time used by the Senator from Texas not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I was in error when I asked that the time of the Senator from Texas not be charged against anyone. I think that should be charged against the time of Senator LIEBERMAN and myself. I ask unanimous consent that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I am getting ready to suggest the absence of a quorum again, and I ask unanimous consent that the quorum call we are about to go into not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I thank the majority leader for the courtesies which have been extended to all Senators, myself in particular because

I am the one I know most about, naturally, in listening to our concerns with respect to the legislation that is before the Senate.

I am glad Members of this body had the opportunity during the August recess to study the House bill, to study the substitute that will be posed eventually by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN, which substitute, of course, is the product of his very great committee and the product in particular of the ranking member, Mr. THOMPSON of Tennessee, on that committee.

I proceed today with a great deal of humility, realizing that I am not a member of the committee. I have no particular reason, other than the fact that I am 1 of 100 Senators who speaks on this matter today with no particular insight from the standpoint of being on the committee which has looked at this legislation. I have read the newspapers. I have read and heard a great deal about what the administration wants. I have done the best I could during the August break, in addition to several other responsibilities I had, to read the House legislation and the substitute which will be proposed by Mr. LIEBERMAN.

So I say to the members of the committee, and to Mr. LIEBERMAN and to Mr. THOMPSON in particular, I respect the work they have done.

I believe one of the two Senators today said there have been 18 hearings of the committee. I was not present at those hearings.

I respect the work of the committee. I have been a Member of Congress 50 years. I know something about committees. I know something about committee hearings. I know something about the time and the energy that are put into hearings by the Members, as well as by the staffs of the members of the committee and the personal staffs of the Senators. I approach this subject today somewhat timidly because I am not on the committee but I am a Senator and I have been very concerned. The reason I am here today is that I am very concerned about how we go about creating the Department of Homeland Security.

First of all, I am very much for a Department of Homeland Security, and I think I made that position clear many weeks ago. I had some concerns with respect to the proposal the House sent over after 2 days of debate on the House floor.

I had some concerns about the appropriations process. Senator STEVENS, distinguished ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, and I have joined in informing Mr. LIEBERMAN and Mr. THOMPSON of our concerns. Mr. STEVENS is a member of Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee. We informed them of our concerns in writing. They have taken our concerns, studied them, and for the most part have dealt with our concerns. So from this moment on, I will have no more to say about the appropriations process because the Lieberman bill, in great measure, puts that thing right.

I have other concerns. I am very concerned President Bush has been promoting his Homeland Security by citing the National Security Act of 1947 as a role model for Government reorganization.

In his weekly radio address on June 8, for example, President Bush stated that he was proposing "the most extensive reorganization of the federal government since the 1940s. During his presidency, Harry Truman recognized that our nation's fragmented defenses had to be reorganized to win the Cold War. He proposed uniting our military forces under a single Department of Defense, and creating the National Security Council to bring together defense, intelligence, and diplomacy."

President Bush is correct to hold up the National Security Act as a role model. Here it is. It is the perfect example of why we must move slowly and carefully in reorganizing our government and avoid acting too swiftly or blindly. A look at the history of the unification of the armed forces reveals that government reorganization is not as quick, or as simple and easy as President Bush may have implied.

Enactment of legislation providing for the unification of the military did not occur in a matter of weeks, nor even months, but years.

On November 3, 1943, the Army Chief of Staff, General George C. Marshall, broke with long-standing War Department anti-unification policy and submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff a proposal favoring a single Department of War. In his book, The Politics of Military Unification, Demetrios Caraley writes: "The conflict over military unification that eventually led to the passage of the National Security Act of 1947 can be said to have begun November 3, 1943." In other words, this was the beginning of what would become a four-year struggle in the effort to reorganize our government by unifying our armed services.

In April 1944, the War Department submitted a unification proposal to the House Select Committee on Postwar Military Policy. That same month, the Committee began two months of hearings on the creation of a single department of the armed forces. The committee concluded that the time was inappropriate for legislation on a single department, strongly implying that such a reorganization might be a distraction from the war effort, and, therefore, should wait until the war was over. The Committee report reads in part:

The committee feels that many lessons are being learned in the war, and that many more lessons will be learned before the shooting stops, and that before any final pattern for a reorganization of the services should be acted upon, Congress should have the benefit of the wise judgment and experience of many commanders in the field.

I point out that, more than two full years had elapsed since General Marshall's proposal, and there had been considerable congressional and administrative activity, including a number of studies, a number of alternate proposals, and a number of hearings, yet Congress at this stage was nowhere close to approving the reorganization of our government.

On June 15, 1946: President Truman, in a letter to congressional leaders, recommended a 12-point program for unification. But considerable opposition to reorganization still remained, and as a result, President Truman eventually requested that the Senate drop consideration of military unification until the next session of Congress.

The next year, February 26, 1947, in a communication to congressional leaders, and I was a member of the West Virginia state legislature, President Truman submitted a unification proposal, which became the National Security Act of 1947, that had been drafted by representatives of the armed forces and had been approved by the Secretaries of War and Navy, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Did you catch that? President Truman submitted a proposal that had been drafted, not by four people in secrecy in the basement of the White House, but by representatives of the armed forces and had been approved by the Secretaries of War and Navy, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

What a difference in Administrations! What a difference in attitudes toward government!

After President Truman's proposal was introduced in both houses of Congress, the Senate Committee on Armed Services began hearings that lasted for ten weeks. The House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments also conducted hearings on the proposal that lasted from April 2 to July 1, 1947.

Meanwhile, on May 20, 1947, the Senate Committee on Armed Services commenced an executive session "to review the testimony received in extensive hearings on the bill and to consider proposed amendments."

Let me say that again: The Senate Committee on Armed Services commenced an executive session—whoa—"to review the testimony received in extensive hearings on the bill and to consider proposed amendments."

Again, I call attention to how slowly, how carefully, and how deliberately Congress was proceeding on this important issue involving the national security of our country. Senators can read the report of the Senate Committee on Armed Services on S. 758 which stressed this very point. The report reads, in part: "In determining the most suitable organization for national security no effort has been spared to uncover past mistakes and shortcomings. During the hearings . . . all phases of each plan were exhaustively examined."

Let me repeat that. The Senate Committee reported that "no effort has been spared to uncover past mistakes and shortcomings" and "all phases of each plan were exhaustively examined." The committee was pointing out that Congress knew what it must do. That there would be no rush to judgment. They were not about to be stampeded into unwise legislation. There was no herd mentality there. They knew that what they were doing would help decide the fate of American government and American society for decades to come. They knew that, as the Nation's lawmakers—and that is what we are, the Nation's lawmakers—they had to be careful and deliberate because so much was at stake.

On July 9, 1947, after debate and amendments, the Senate finally approved the National Security Act.

The House of Representatives was just as careful and deliberate in considering this reorganization of our Government. The reason, the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments pointed out in its report, was that "both civilian and service witnesses advised against a too-hurried consideration of the bill."

Finally, on July 19, 1947, the House began considering H.R. 4214, the committee's version of the President's draft bill. It approved the measure only after considering 17 amendments. Nine of the amendments were approved.

On July 24, 1947, after five meetings, a conference committee reported a compromise version of S. 758 and so The House adopted the conference report.

Two days later, President Truman signed the National Security Act into law, one half year after the legislation had been introduced, and four years since General Marshall recommended unification of our armed forces.

I realize we do not have 4 years to act in this situation. I realize the situations are different in many ways; the circumstances are different in many ways. I know that. But this is a government reorganization that President Bush holds up as the role model for the present government reorganization which we are considering. The problem is that this administration envisions Congress approving in just a few weeks a massive reorganization of the Federal Government that involves 22 agencies and 170,000 Federal workers.

The administration should stop reading "Gulliver's Travels" and start reading some history, especially the history behind the unification of our Armed Forces. If it is going to use that as the role model, the National Security Act—the reorganization of our military, the establishment of a Department of Defense—we should read the history behind the unification of these Armed Forces. It is a cautionary tale, and one that the administration and we would do well to remember.

I am very concerned that 30 years from now, Congress will be struggling to rectify the problems that we will be creating with hasty, ill-considered enactment of the Department of Homeland Security. There was all this rush, there was all this hue and cry that we ought to get this done before Congress goes out for the August recess. The House passed this bill after 2 days of floor debate and took off a week earlier than the Senate did. Then there was the idea we ought to do this by September 11.

What we need to do is to develop a product that works. We need to have legislation enacted by Congress and signed by the President that is right, not something that is hurriedly passed just to conform with an artificial deadline on the calendar. How much harm could be done in the meantime can be imagined. I am referring to damage to the rights and the liberties that we hold most dear: civil rights, labor rights, labor protection, civil liberties of all Americans. I am talking about damage to our constitutional process. We can inflict damage upon the constitutional process if we act in haste, and that damage perhaps cannot be and will not be rectified for years to come. We must not inflict damage on our constitutional processes.

President Bush's proposed Department of Homeland Security is an enormous grant of power to the executive branch. I hope that everyone who hears me will understand that—an enormous grant of power to the executive branch. It constitutes control of 170,000 Federal workers and a huge piece of the Federal budget. It will mean a major change in the governmental infrastructure of our Nation.

This may be for keeps. This may be the infrastructure that will last through the lifetimes of at least some of us. And we cannot and must not close our eyes to the threats that are involved here, by well-intentioned people I am sure, the threats to the constitutional processes that have guided this Nation for 215 years and should continue to guide it in the future.

This Constitution is good enough to guide us through whatever emergencies may confront this country. We must not cede this power, power that the administration wants but not necessarily needs—but the administration wants it. Let's stop, look, and listen and be careful what we are doing.

I wonder how many out of 100 Senators took the time during the recess to read the House bill, to read the substitute that is about to be proposed by Mr. LIEBERMAN and Mr. THOMPSON. How many Senators took the time to read and to ponder what we are about to do? I did. I am not an expert on the House bill or the substitute by Mr. LIEBERMAN. I have not put as much time, naturally, by any means, in my study of the Lieberman substitute as has he or his counterpart or the members of that committee.

So the members of that committee knew very well what was in the bill. But how many other Senators took the time to sit down and read and mark and underline and think about the words, the phrases, the sentences that are included in this substitute and in the underlying bill?

Let Senators remember that once we pass a bill in the Senate, which we must and which we will, then we in the Senate—half of the legislative branch, this half, except for the committee conferees—will be out of it. I don't bemoan the fact that I will be out of it, but most of the Senate will be out of it. We will have said our piece. We will have made our press releases. And we will have had an opportunity to offer amendments.

But how many of us are prepared to offer amendments? How many of us have read this legislation? How many in the media know what we are talking about and what is in this legislation? The people out there, 280 million of them, who are represented by 100 Senators, do not have the slightest idea what is encompassed in this legislation. They have heard the President on the campaign trail talking about this bill: pass it, pass it, pass it. They have heard others in the administration. I don't have any criticism of that. They naturally want this bill passed.

We need to look at it. We Senators have a duty to study it and to take the time and, if necessary, offer amendments where we believe amendments should be offered and the Senate must be given the opportunity to work its will. And it will work its will.

But I am concerned. That is where I am coming from, and I am sure there are other Senators who would be equally concerned if they read these bills. But they have been busy. Senators are very busy people. I know that.

In a recent column, David Broder wisely pointed out that because the mission of the Department of Homeland Security "is so large and its scale is so vast, it is worth taking the time to get it right."

That is David Broder, and he got it right when he said that. I will continue with his words.

It is worth taking the time to get it right. Having the bill on the President's desk by the symbolic first anniversary of the terrorist attacks is much less vital than making the design as careful as it can be.

Hallelujah. That was David Broder. He is right.

Now let me read what he said without my editorial comment. He said: . . . the mission of the Department of Homeland Security "is so large and its scale is so vast, it is worth taking the time to get it right. Having the bill on the president's desk by the symbolic first anniversary of the terrorist attacks is much less vital when making the design as careful as it can be."

I remind my colleagues that once the genie is out of the bottle, it is gone. It would be difficult to get it back into the bottle. This bill is the best, if not the last, opportunity for Congress to make sure that we are not unleashing a genie, a very dangerous genie.

I realize it is not easy to go against the administration for some of my colleagues, in an election year especially. But our duty to our country and to future generations compels us to do no less. And I intend to do no less than stand on my feet and speak my thoughts. This is what separates the men from the boys, the women from the girls, and the statesmen from the politicians.

Madam President, how much time do I have remaining?

What is the time situation with respect to the upcoming vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are going into executive session at 12:30.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Presiding Officer.

Madam President, I hope Senators will take a look at this morning's Washington Post. On the front page there is a column by Gregg Schneider and Sara Kehaulani Goo, Washington Post staff writers. The headline reads as follows:

Twin Missions Overwhelmed TSA. Airport Agency Strives to Create Self, Stop Terror.

This story that I am about to take excerpts from tells exactly why we ought to take time and do this right.

I read from the column:

When a gunman opened fire at a Los Angeles International Airport ticket counter on July 4, the nation's new agency in charge of airport security got its first chance to swing into action.

Instead, it claimed the shooting was outside its jurisdiction.

After bullets sprayed across the crowded holiday terminal, killing three, the agency's director at the time, John W. Magaw, looked on helplessly as his own spokesmen dismissed the incident as a matter for local police and the FBI. "That's nuts. That is nuts," Magaw said later.

But by that holiday, with the nation on edge about a terrorist attack, Magaw had lost control of the Transportation Security Administration. He had run the high-profile, multibillion-dollar agency far astray from what Congress and the Bush administration said they wanted, alienating everyone from local airport operators to commercial airline pilots.

Now get this. I continue to read:

The agency simply couldn't keep up with the twin demands of creating itself and devising a system of stopping terrorists.

There you are in a nutshell. That is the problem.

Internally, there was tension over the TSA's mission, with a growing core of leaders steeped in law enforcement at odds with political forces demanding customer service. Magaw and his deputies clashed with key members of Congress and the White House over budgets and left airport managers around the country feeling shut out.

The fact that the TSA was flat-footed on the day of the most violent attack on U.S. aviation since Sept. 11 underscores how, after nearly a year of building a new federal agency to take over airport security, few broad changes have taken place.

There you are. That is our problem. We are about to create a new department of homeland security, which I am for. I will vote for that. Then we are about to create 6 directors, and we are about to set up a superstructure. In this bill, once we pass the package and send it down to the President, we are going to say there it is. You take it. It is yours. Then the administration will have the colossal task of transitioning, as I read it, 22 agencies.

I was talking with Senator LIEBERMAN this morning. I was told that more likely there will be 28 agencies and offices. There you have it, Mr. Administration. It is yours. That is what Congress is about to do. It is yours.

Can one imagine the chaos that is going to occur when all of these agencies are supposed to be transitioned into the department of security within 13 months, and the people within them. One-hundred and seventy thousand Federal employees will have to become accustomed to a new culture, once they are transitioned. They will have to move their desks, their computers, and their telephones. They will have to get acquainted with new associates. They will have new and different missions.

When we talk about the 1947 role model of the National Security Act, we are talking about military branches that had the same mission, overall. Those were not different missions. These people are going to be put into a brand spanking new, polished-chrome metal piece of toy to guard the homeland, and to guard the people. All of these people put into one agency are going to be concerned about their pay scales, their worker rights, and their privacy rights—all of those things. There they will be. All yours, Mr. President. Here it is. You asked for it. Here it is now so Congress can stand on the sidelines for the next 13 months.

I am saying no. Congress should not stand on the sidelines for the next 13 months. We have a duty under the Constitution to exercise oversight and to see that the agencies are properly brought into the six directories.

I am thinking of the same directorates the committee recommended, the same superstructure. I am saying that is fine. But now, when it comes to bringing in the 22 agencies or the 28 agencies or the 30 agencies or the 25 agencies—I have heard all of these numbers; we do not even know the number of agencies—when it comes to fusing those, what are the criteria for this agency or that agency or some other agency or some part of that agency? What are the criteria by which somebody is going to have to be guided in bringing these agencies into the superstructure and making them part of the directorates, which are parts of the new Department of Homeland Security?

Who knows? I have not seen anything in my reading, anything in writing. I have not heard anything in any way by which these 22 agencies—I will say 28, since Mr. LIEBERMAN has counted them. What are the criteria and what is going to happen?

Look at what the Post is reporting happened to the brandnew, shiny transportation agency, the TSA. And here we are talking about 22 or 25 or 28 or 30 more agencies, putting them all in. Here, Mr. President. Here is what you asked for. Here is the bill. You take it. That is what we are about to do, and I do not think we should do it.

I think Congress should stay in the mix, should continue to exercise its oversight, its judgment, give its advice, give its consent, and vote up or down as we go along on the procedure.

Now, I am going to offer an amendment at some point. I may offer several amendments, but the first amendment I offer will deal only with title I, only with title I. But my concern is that Congress has a responsibility, it has a duty to which it must face up, and that duty is to keep a hand on this, to maintain oversight. And I think these 22 agencies—I will quit using 22; I am going to use JOE LIEBERMAN's figure, 28—these 28 agencies should be phased in, in an orderly process that gives the Congress the time, as we go along, to look at what the administration—through this new Secretary of Homeland Security, through his recommendations—recommendations are.

Congress should not just hand this thing over lock, stock, and barrel, to this administration, or any other administration, and say: Here it is. You take it.

So here, in microcosm, is the problem. And we are reading about it right here in this Washington Post of today. I won't read the whole column right now. I may refer to it again later.

But let me proceed now by saying that the homeland security legislation that we will be considering this week has become something much more than mere legislation. It has become a political windstorm blowing down Pennsylvania Avenue and through the Halls of Congress.

The President's proposal has been barreling through Congress like a Mack truck, threatening to run over anyone who dares to stand in its way. And Congress, so far, has cleared a path and cheered on this rumbling big rig, without stopping to think seriously about where it is ultimately headed. Now we are going to think seriously about it.

The President assures us that he is safely behind the wheel, and that all we need to do is give him the “flexibility”—I use his word, “flexibility”—he needs to fight terror immediately, and he will handle it from there.

While the President’s assurances may help some people sleep better, I am left tossing and turning on my pillow at night. I fear terrorism as much as anyone, and I recognize the need for constructive, decisive action in these daunting times. But lately I have also been plagued by the fear that, in the name of homeland security, we may be jeopardizing liberties from within our own Government by unwittingly trading in many of the constitutional protections which were designed by the Founding Fathers as safeguards against the dangerous tendencies of human nature.

In Federalist No. 48, James Madison wrote:

It will not be denied that power is of an encroaching nature and that it ought to be effectually restrained from passing the limits assigned to it.

Now, that is James Madison:

It will not be denied that power is of an encroaching nature and that it ought to be effectually restrained from passing the limits assigned to it.

The President is clearly attempting to remove the limits on his power. I don’t question his good intention. Maybe he doesn’t understand what he is doing. But this is clearly an attempt to remove limits on the Executive’s power, and Congress is doing very little, up to this point, to restrain the administration’s ambitions.

I am alarmed that the President is demanding such broad authority over an unprecedented amount of resources and information, while at the same time asking us to eliminate existing legal restrictions to allow him the “managerial flexibility” to respond to changing threats. His proposal gives the Secretary of Homeland Security almost unlimited access to intelligence and law enforcement information without adequate protections against misuse of such information. I am willing to give the President necessary authority to secure the Nation’s safety, but I believe we can give him flexibility without giving him a blank check.

In Federalist No. 48—and Senators and Representatives and other people should read the Federalist Papers once again—in Federalist No. 48 here is what he said:

An elective despotism was not the government we fought for. . . .

Nobody is suggesting there be an elective despotism. But I am suggesting that we better go very carefully, as we legislate on this proposal, that we do not release to the executive branch, by legislation, powers that the Constitution guards against.

This is what Madison says:

An elective despotism was not the government we fought for. . . .

We can, in this Senate, very well pass legislation that ends up giving to any President—I am not just talking about Mr. Bush—the powers that amount to an elective despotism. That is what I am concerned about in this legislation—one of the things.

An elective despotism was not the government we fought for; but one which should not only be founded on free principles, but in which the powers of government should be so divided and balanced among several bodies of magistracy as that no one could transcend their legal limits without being effectually checked and restrained by the others.

Now, that is what I am saying Congress needs to be aware of. We need to be on guard that we do not pass legislation that, in the end, gives a President—and there is no assurance that this President will be President forever; he may be President for 2 more years or maybe 6 more years. Who knows. But the Congress must be on guard in this legislation—I know it is very tempting to vote without further delay, without any argument, vote for a new department of homeland security. And we ought to have it. But it will be very easy for Congress to pass legislation that, in the end, results in elective despotism. Madison warns us against it.

The President’s proposal cripples internal oversight offices and weakens external legal controls on the Department, including unnecessary exemptions from public disclosure laws such as the Federal Advisory Committee Act and the Freedom of Information Act, allowing the Secretary to exercise his broad authority in relative secrecy.

In many of these areas, Senator LIEBERMAN’s committee, working with Senator THOMPSON, has brought in a bill that is, in my judgment, much better than the administration’s proposal, which is largely reflected by the House bill. And at the end of the day, the House bill will be before the Senate—at some point, Mr. LIEBERMAN will offer his substitute—so that the Senate will have before it both the House bill and the Lieberman proposal.

So what I am saying is not altogether, or even in great part, criticism of the product the committee has given to the Senate. I am stating my concerns. We cannot brush aside the House bill. It is going to be in conference, and we are going into conference, and these conferees are going to be up against the House conferees—the House, which is under the control of the other party, which is in control of the White House. So I do not envy the challenges that are going to be before our Senate conferees. I am speaking of my concerns with respect to one or both of these measures that will be before the Senate.

These exemptions reflect the administration’s strong antagonism toward traditional “good government” and “sunshine” laws that attempt to cast light on government activities and subject them to public scrutiny. The administration is seizing on this legislative opportunity to weaken these important laws.

The administration is attempting to gut the traditional protections for personal privacy and civil rights abuses from the new Department, and the bill that was passed by the House of Representatives effectively dismantles most of these safeguards. Unfortunately, the Senate doesn’t do enough, in my judgment, to restore those checks.

The Senate bill does require, very generally, that the Secretary and the directorate for intelligence establish rules and procedures for governing the disclosure of sensitive information. Some of this language restricts the use of information to only authorized and “official” purposes, but this restriction is meaningless because the vague authority given to the Secretary allows him to claim that almost anything he wants to do constitutes an “official” purpose.

In pressuring Congress to pass homeland security legislation, the administration is using the “war on terror” as a red herring to draw attention away from the underlying objectives of the administration’s proposal, which include expanding the regime of secrecy that has been established by the White House to the 22, 25, 28, or 30 agencies of the new Department of Homeland Security.

Once the Department has been legally shrouded in secrecy, the President can take advantage of his broad access to information and its vague mission and authority to command the “war” without scrutiny from Congress or the public.

The President has proclaimed that we are entering a “new era,” one that will resemble the cold war in its concerns for national security. His proposal marks a disturbing start for this era and I am afraid may be a sign of things to come. The cold war began with an iron curtain descending over Europe. Under this bill, the war on terror may have begun with an iron curtain descending around our Government.

Congress must not defer to executive judgment alone. Congress must not trust that this administration, or any other administration, will always act in the best interest of the Nation. Absolute trust and unquestioning deference are dangerous gifts for the legislature to bestow on the executive, even when our leaders have given us no reason for doubt.

Good intentions do not guarantee good government. As Madison tells us in Federalist No. 51:

If men were angels, no government would be necessary. If angels were to govern men, neither external nor internal controls on government would be necessary. In framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: You first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place, oblige it to control itself. A dependence on the people is no doubt the primary control on the government; but experience has taught mankind the necessity of auxiliary precautions.

Madam President, Justice Brandeis echoed Madison's warning of the dangers of relying on the good intentions of government. He wrote:

Experience should teach us to be most on our guard to protect liberty when the government's purposes are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evil minded rulers. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning, but without understanding.

I suspect that this administration means well in its desire to mobilize the Government against terror, but so many in the administration have come lately—not all, but some. I fear that some of what the administration is asking for is a danger to the people's liberty.

In our rush to reorganize the Government, we seem to have forgotten the principles upon which the Government was founded. The Constitution established a system of divided Government, a system that feared tyranny more than it favored efficiency. The Constitution's separation of powers and checks and balances were not designed to provide managerial flexibility to any President, Democrat or Republican. They were designed to limit the power of the state over its citizens by ensuring that individual liberties could not be easily abridged by the unchallenged authority of any one branch of Government.

President Harry Truman proposed the most dramatic reorganization of the last century, creating the Department of Defense and the CIA in response to the new threats of the cold war. But even after he presided over such a critical moment of national security, he remained skeptical of the need for efficiency and flexibility in the executive branch. Truman said:

When there's too much efficiency in government, you've got a dictator. And it isn't efficiency in government we're after, it's freedom in government. . . .

That is Truman. That is my favorite Democratic President in our time. Following him came Mr. Eisenhower, who I have—at least lately—come to believe was the greatest Republican President in our time.

I continue with Truman's words:

And if the time ever comes when we concentrate all the power for legislating and for justice in one place, then we've got a dictatorship and we go down the drain the same as all the rest of those republics have.

Madam President, the administration's proposal makes clear to me that it is not freedom in Government the administration is after.

The Secretary of Homeland Security will become a human link between the FBI, the CIA, and local police departments, serving as a "focal point" for all intelligence information available to the United States. I am concerned that in this role he may be able to circumvent existing legal restrictions placed on those agencies to protect individual privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties.

The Homeland Security Department will be authorized to draw on the resources of almost any relevant agency at the Federal, State, and local level, ranging from sensitive international intelligence compiled by the CIA and the NSA to surveillance of U.S. citizens by the FBI and local police. Many of these agencies were very purposely kept separate and distinct, or were given limited jurisdiction or investigative powers, in order to reduce abuses of power. However, when the Department—this new Department—draws on the resources and information of other agencies, it may not necessarily be subject to the same legal restraints imposed on those agencies.

In addition, the civil rights officer and the privacy officer established under the administration's plan to uncover abuses in the Department are not given enough authority to actually carry out their jobs. They are essentially advisers with no real investigative or enforcement power. Both officers are responsible for ensuring compliance with existing law, but their only legal recourse after identifying a problem or violation is to report the problem to the Department's inspector general.

However, the inspector general, in turn, is under no obligation to follow up on privacy and civil rights complaints, only an obligation to inform Congress of any "civil rights abuses" in semi-annual reports. If and when the IG does choose to investigate, he will often be unable to do so independently as the Inspector General Act intended, because this plan provides that the inspector general will be "under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary"—now get that. That ought to be enough to curl your hair. Let me read that again. The inspector general will be "under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary"—meaning the Secretary of Homeland Security—"with respect to audits or investigations, or the issuance of subpoenas, which require access to sensitive information." And the Secretary can say no if he determines certain things, which I can read into the RECORD—he determines; if he determines, the Secretary; if he determines no, the inspector general is stopped in his tracks. That is it. Is that the way the people in this country want it to be? I do not believe so.

Granting the Secretary control over internal investigations puts the "fox in charge of the hen house" whenever the fox claims a national security reason for it.

The inspector general can say: I have a national security reason. You have to stop. You cannot investigate further. You cannot subpoena witnesses. You cannot because Congress passed the law that the administration wanted saying you cannot. So you stop right here in your tracks.

Is that the way the American people want it? No.

The President's proposal also lets the fox have his way when he uses working groups—now get this—to investigate or craft policy. Although not included in the Senate bill, the House bill, which will be before the Senate likewise, allows the Secretary of Homeland Security to exempt advisory groups within the Department from the disclosure requirements of the Federal Advisory Committee Act. The practical effect of this authority would be to give the Secretary of Homeland Security the ability to conduct secret meetings to craft Department policy, minimizing interference from Congress and the public.

This would appear to expand the model of secret policymaking currently employed in the administration, the most notable example being Vice President CHENEY's secret energy working group.

While the Federal Advisory Committee Act does exempt the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Reserve from disclosure requirements, the justification for doing so cannot support providing the same exemption for the Department of Homeland Security.

The broad authority and domestic jurisdiction of the Department distinguish it from the CIA which has no authority to invade the privacy of U.S. citizens domestically and whose activities are controlled more directly by the President in exercise of his constitutional powers over foreign affairs. The exemption for the Federal Reserve protects financial information and economic projections in order to protect the integrity of the markets.

While it may be reasonable to excuse the Fed from this kind of public disclosure, I am not comfortable in allowing the Secretary of Homeland Security to set the level of preparedness in complete secrecy in the same way that Alan Greenspan sets interest rates.

The Federal Advisory Committee Act already allows waivers for sensitive information, so there is no compelling national security justification for providing this blanket exemption. Removing this exemption would not eliminate the Secretary's ability to convene committees in secret, but it would make the Secretary and the President more accountable—more accountable—for choosing to do so.

The President is authorized under existing law to determine which committees should be exempt from disclosure for national security reasons, and he must explain himself every time he does so. The bill passed by the House allows the Secretary to exempt committees at will, while only paying lip-service to Congress. Both the House bill and the Senate bill provide an unnecessary exemption, in my viewpoint, from the Freedom of Information Act for critical infrastructure information provided by private corporations.

The FOIA requires public disclosure of Government materials on request, but it already provides exemptions for national security information, sensitive law enforcement information, and confidential business information. The administration's proposal extends these exemptions to include any information voluntarily submitted by corporations to the Department. As a result of this exemption, this corporate information could not be released under the Freedom of Information Act for other enforcement purposes, so corporations would be allowed to escape liability for any information they submit.

I have argued, Madam President, that parts of this bill should be put off to allow enough time for informed deliberation. I reaffirm my objections to rushing into all of these agency transfers and new directives. However, these secrecy problems have to be addressed also.

The President has said that how we respond to this crisis will determine what kind of legacy we leave. I agree with the President on that point. That is exactly why I suggest to the Members of the Senate we should take time to remember the legacy that we have inherited, a legacy of liberty and limited Government, and preserve these principles in the legacy that we will bequeath.

This new Department is going to be with us for some time, so we must think beyond the next election and act with an eye to the future. This Congress needs to make sure we will have some recourse in the event that the administration's reorganization does not live up to all of its promises. Congress has a role to play in the ongoing supervision of the Federal Government, and we should not compromise that role by hastily surrendering our constitutional powers.

I yield the floor.

The Nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the President will be immediately notified of the Senate's action.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, today the Senate is confirming Terrence McVerry to the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. He is the 73rd judicial nominee of President George W. Bush to be confirmed by the Senate since July 20 last year. With today's vote, the Democratic-led Senate has already exceeded the number of circuit and district court nominees confirmed in the last 30 months of Republican control of the Senate, when 72 judges were confirmed in those 2½ years. Democrats have done more than Republicans did in less than half the time.

It is revealing that Republicans, with all of their misleading statistics, consistently fail to compare their actual results during their most recent period of control of the Senate with the progress we have made since the shift in the Senate majority. They do not want to compare their own record over the prior 6½ years with our record of accomplishment in evaluating judicial nominees. They do not want to own up to their delay and inaction on scores of judicial nominees during the last administration. During the period of Republican control of the Senate, judicial vacancies rose from 63 to 110. Since the change in majority, the Democratic Senate has worked hard to help fill 73 of those vacancies.

All too often the only claim that we hear about the Republican record is that President Clinton ultimately appointed 377 judges, five fewer than President Reagan. Our Republican critics try to obscure the fact that only 245 of those district and circuit court judges were confirmed in the 6½ years that the Republican majority controlled the pace of Senate hearings and consideration. That averages only 38 confirmations per year. Over an 8-year period that would have yielded 304 confirmations. In fact, the Republican majority over the last 6 years of the Clinton administration produced on average only 58 percent of the confirmations achieved during the first 2 years of that administration.

As of today, the Democratic majority in the Senate has acted to confirm 73 judges, including 13 nominees to the circuit courts. We have proceeded to almost double the confirmation rates of the former Republican majority. We have done more in less than 15 months than they achieved in their last 30 months in the majority.

The reason Republicans do not want to talk about their record and compare apples to apples is because this truth does not fit comfortably with the myth of obstruction by Democrats that they have been working so hard to disseminate for their own partisan purposes. This situation reminds me of a quote by Adlai Stevenson, who said "I have been thinking that I would make a proposition to my Republican friends . . . that if they will stop telling lies about the Democrats, we will stop telling the truth about them." Unfortunately, the persistence of the myth of inaction in the face of such a clear record of progress on judicial vacancies by Democrats makes me worry that Republicans are following the cynical observation that a lie told often enough becomes viewed as the truth. I am confident that Americans understand that Democrats have been fairer to this President's judicial nominees than Republicans were to his predecessor's nominees.

Today's vote is another example. The Senate has acted quickly on this nomination to the District Court in Pennsylvania. Mr. McVerry was nominated in January, received his ABA peer review in March, participated in a hearing in June, and he was reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee in July. The Judiciary Committee has held hearings for 10 district court nominees from Pennsylvania and the Senate has confirmed nine of them in just five months. There is no State in the Union that has had more Federal judicial nominees confirmed by this Senate than Pennsylvania. I think that the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate as a whole have done well by Pennsylvania.

This is in sharp contrast to the way vacancies in Pennsylvania were left unfilled during Republican control of the Senate, particularly regarding nominees in the western half of the State. Despite the best efforts and diligence of my good friend from Pennsylvania, Senator SPECTER, to secure confirmation of all of the judicial nominees from every part of his home State, there were seven nominees by President Clinton to Pennsylvania vacancies who never got a hearing or a vote.

A good example of the contrast between the way the Democrats and Republicans have treated judicial nominees is the case of Judge Legrome Davis, a well qualified and uncontroversial judicial nominee. He was first nominated to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania by President Clinton on July 30, 1998. The Republican-controlled Senate took no action on his nomination and it was returned to the President at the end of 1998. On January 26, 1999, President Clinton renominated Judge Davis for the same vacancy. The Senate again failed to hold a hearing for Judge Davis and his nomination was returned after two more years.

Under Republican leadership, Judge Davis' nomination languished before the Committee for 868 days without a hearing. Unfortunately, Judge Davis was subjected to the kind of inappropriate partisan rancor that befell so many other nominees to the district courts in Pennsylvania during the Republican control of the Senate. This year, the Democratic-led Senate moved expeditiously to consider Judge Davis, and he was confirmed promptly, five weeks after receiving his ABA peer review, without a single negative vote. The saga of Judge Davis recalls for us so many nominees from the period of January 1995 through July 10, 2001, who never received a hearing or a vote and who were the subject of secret, anonymous holds by Republicans for reasons that were never explained.

The hearing we had earlier this year for Judge Joy Conti was the very first hearing on a nominee to the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania since 1994, despite President Clinton's qualified nominees to that court. It is shocking to me that this was the first hearing on a nominee to that court in eight full years. No nominee to the Western District of Pennsylvania received a hearing during the entire period that Republicans controlled the Senate during the Clinton Administration. One of the nominees to the Western District, Lynette Norton, waited for almost 1,000 days, and she was never given a hearing. Unfortunately, Ms. Norton died earlier this year, having never fulfilled her dream of serving on the Federal bench. With the confirmation of Judge Conti, we confirmed the first nominee to the Western District of Pennsylvania since October of 1994. Despite this history of poor treatment of President Clinton's nominees, the Democratic-led Senate continues to move forward fairly and expeditiously. Terry McVerry is the most recent example of our willingness to proceed in spite of recent Republican obstructionism.

Democrats have reformed the process for considering judicial nominees. For example, we have ended the practice of secretive, anonymous holds that plagued the period of Republican control, when any Republican Senator could hold any nominee from his or her home State, his or her own circuit or any part of the country for any reason, or no reason, without any accountability.

We have returned to the Democratic tradition of regularly holding hearings, every few weeks, rather than going for months without a single hearing. In fact, we have held 23 judicial nominations hearings in our first 12 and one-half months, an average of almost two per month. In contrast, during the 6½ years of Republican control, during each of 30 months they did not hold a nominations hearing on a single judicial nominee. By holding 23 hearings for 84 of this President's judicial nominees, we have held hearings for more circuit and district court nominees than in 20 of the last 22 years during the Reagan, first Bush, and Clinton administrations. The opposition party would rather not refer to these facts, which debunk Republican myths about who caused the vacancy crisis and delayed judicial appointments.

When the Senate Judiciary Committee reorganized after the change in Senate majority, there were 110 judicial vacancies. That included 33 circuit court vacancies, twice the number that existed when Republicans took over the Judiciary Committee in 1995. During the past 13 and one-half months, another 43 vacancies have arisen, largely due to retirements of past Republican appointees to the courts. If Democrats had, in fact, obstructed judicial nominees, as Republicans so often claim, there would now be 153 vacancies in our Federal courts, not the 80 that currently remain.

We have tried to do our best to address the judicial vacancies problem. We have been able to consider district court nominees more quickly because they have been generally less controversial and ideological than this President's choices for the circuit courts. Not all of the district court nominees we have considered, however, have been without controversy. One of the nominees on whom we have proceeded received a majority "Not Qualified" peer review rating from the ABA due to his relative inexperience. Five other district court nominees have received some "Not Qualified" votes during the ABA peer reviews. This is despite the fact that the ABA's rating now come after the President has given his imprimatur to the candidate and peers may be chilled from candidly sharing their concerns.

A number of President Bush's district court nominees to lifetime seats on the Federal bench have also been unusually young and have been practicing law for a little more than a decade. Some of them have views with which we strongly disagree. Several of this President's judicial nominees seem to have earned their nominations as members of the Federalist Society. Others have records demonstrating that they are pro-life and will actively undercut women's right to choose. Some have already gone on to issue decisions against the privacy rights of women. Many of this President's district court nominees have been very active in Republican and conservative politics or causes. Still other nominees have been intimately involved in partisan politics or played key roles in Republican fundraising. Today, the Senate is confirming a person whose spouse is employed as the treasurer of Senator SANTORUM's election campaign.

The Federal district courts matter. They are the courts of first resort, the trial courts where individuals' claims are tried or dismissed. Not everyone can afford the costs of appealing a trial court ruling. Additionally, circuit courts traditionally give great deference to the findings of the lower court that examined the claims and observed witnesses first hand, rather than making new factual findings based on a cold record. Of course, matters of law are reviewed by the circuit courts, and their rulings can have a substantial impact on the development of the law, especially with a Supreme Court that hears fewer than 100 cases per year.

Because we have moved quickly and responsibly on consensus nominees, the number of vacancies is not at the 153 mark it would be at with no action, but is down to 80. On July 10, 2001, with the reorganization of the Senate, we began with 110 vacancies, 77 of which were on the district courts. Despite the large number of additional vacancies that have arisen in the past year, with the 60 district court confirmations we have had as of today, we have reduced district court vacancies to 51. That is almost to the level it was at when Republicans took over the Senate in 1995.

The opposition party dismisses this achievement in a backhanded way, but it is one of the most significant things we have accomplished for the sake of the Federal courts and for litigants in the Federal courts. It has not been easy to process that many district court nominees in little more than one year. We have confirmed more of this President's district court nominees over the past year than in any of the prior 6½ years of Republican control. Indeed, we have achieved more district court confirmations in the last 13 months than Republicans accomplished in all of 1999 and 2000 combined and more than were confirmed during the last 30 months of Republican majority control of the Senate.

We have had hearings for more of this President's district court nominees than in any year of the Reagan Administration, and he had 6 years of a Senate majority of his own party. Indeed, we have confirmed more of President George W. Bush's district court nominees in these past 13 plus months than were confirmed in any year of his father's presidency and more than were confirmed during his father's first two full years combined.

In contrast to how fairly we have treated this President's Federal court nominees, consider how poorly nominees were treated during the prior 6½ years of Republican control of the Senate. Some district court nominees waited years and never received a hearing. For example, nine district court nominees from Pennsylvania alone never got hearings, including then Pennsylvania Common Pleas Court Judge Legrome Davis, who was subsequently re-nominated by President Bush and confirmed earlier this year. Four district court nominees from California were never given a hearing by Republicans despite the full support of their home-State Senators. These are just a few examples of Republican obstruction of judicial nominees. In all, more than three dozen of President Clinton's district court nominees never received hearings or votes by Republicans.

Several others received hearings but never were given votes by the Republican-controlled Judiciary Committee. These included six district court nominees, such as Fred Woocher, a California district court nominee and Clarence Sundram from New York. Still others waited hundreds and hundreds of days to be confirmed, such as Judge Susan Oki Mollway of the District Court in Hawaii, whose nomination languished for 913 days before she was confirmed, and Judge Margaret Morrow of the District Court for the Central District of California who waited almost 2 years, 643 days, to be confirmed. Let us not forget Missouri Supreme Court Justice Ronnie White who was delayed twice only to be defeated on the Senate floor, in a sneak attack. Judge White had waited 801 days only to be defeated through character assassination on the floor of the Senate. In all, nearly 60 of President Clinton's judicial nominees were blocked, many in the dark of night through secretive, anonymous holds.

When confronted with their record Republicans often refer to all nominees not getting hearings in 1992. That year, the Senate confirmed more of President George H.W. Bush's judicial nominees than in any year of his presidency and confirmed more judges than in any year in which the Republican majority controlled consideration of President Clinton's nominees. In 1992, 66 judges were confirmed. So, even though some nominations were returned, the Senate in 1992 worked hard to confirm a substantial number, 66, of new judges in the 10 months they were in session during that presidential election year. By contrast, in 1996 when the Republicans were in the Senate majority only 17 judges were confirmed all year and none for the vacancies on the courts of appeals. In 2000, the Republican majority in the Senate confirmed only 39 judges.

When the Senate is working hard to confirm judges, as it was in 1992 and since last summer, it may be understandable that not all nominees can be considered. When, as was the case during the Republican majority, the Senate is averaging only 38 confirmations a year and going months and months without a single hearing, the circumstances are quite different. The Republican majority in their 6½ years of control of the Senate ensured that they never treated President Clinton's judicial nominees better than the best year of former President Bush's Administration—just as they made sure that President Clinton's total number of judges appointed never reached that of President Reagan. By contrast, the Democratic majority has reversed the downward spiral and has treated this President's nominees more fairly than the Republican majority treated those of the last President.

We have also been confirming this President's judicial nominees at a record pace. Rather than continue the Republican pace of 38 confirmations a year, we have worked hard to do better. We have been so fair to President George W. Bush, despite the past unfairness of Republicans, that if we continue at the current pace of confirmations, President Bush will appoint 227 judges by the end of his term. If this President were to serve two terms like Presidents Reagan and Clinton, he would amass 454 judicial appointments, dramatically shattering President Reagan's all-time record of 382. Some may say we have been foolishly fair, given how Republican treated the nominees of the last Democratic President. But this, too, demonstrates how fair the Democratic Senate majority has been these last 13½ months.

When we adjourned for the August recess we had given hearings to 91 percent of this President's judicial nominees who had completed their paperwork and who had the support of both of their home-State Senators. That is, 84 of the 92 judicial nominees with completed files had received hearings. Indeed, when we held our last nomination hearing on August 1, we had given hearings to 66 district court nominees and we had run out of district court nominees with completed paperwork and home-State support. Only two district court nominees were eligible for that hearing. This is because the White House changed the process of allowing the ABA to begin its work prior to formal nomination. This unilateral change by the White House has already cost the federal judiciary the chance to have 12 to 15 more district court nominees on the bench and hearing cases these past 13 months. Many more of the two dozen pending nominees may not receive an ABA evaluation in time to be considered by the Senate this year.

On average, the ABA reviews of district court nominees have been received 59 days from the date of nomination. With the recent delays that we have experienced in the time nominees are taking to complete the Committee questionnaire and the changeover in personnel at the ABA, that time may continue to expand in the few weeks remaining to us before the recess in October this year. Thus, even as the White House professes to blame the Senate for not making progress on even more nominees, it continues to do all it can to delay the process due to its unilateral approach.

In January I had proposed a simple procedural fix to allow the ABA evaluation to begin at the same time as the FBI investigation, as was the practice in past Republican and Democratic administrations for 50 years. Then the ABA could be in position to submit its evaluation immediately following the nomination. Had this proposal been accepted, I am confident there would be more than a dozen fewer vacancies in the Federal courts. Instead our efforts to increase cooperation with the White House have been rebuffed. We continue to get the least cooperation from any White House I can recall during my nearly three decades in the Senate.

In spite of the obstacles they have put in the way of their own nominees through their lack of consultation and cooperation, we have been able to have a record-breaking year restoring fairness to the judicial confirmation process. We have been rewarded with nearly constant criticism from the administration and its allies.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales dismisses our accomplishments with a terse, one-sentence acknowledgement that Democrats have "made progress in holding hearings and votes on district court nominees." With today's vote, we have already confirmed 60 new Federal trial court judges. That is more than were confirmed in 21 of the past 23 years. We have confirmed more district court nominees in these past 13½ months than were ever confirmed by the Republican majority during their prior 6½ years of control of the Senate.

For example, in 1995, the year the Republicans took over the Senate, President Clinton nominated 68 district court candidates, but the Republican controlled Senate held hearings for and confirmed only 45 of those nominees. Republicans would call that 66 percent. In 1996, Republicans confirmed only 17 of the district court nominations pending and, of course no nominees to the circuit courts. That was 50 percent of the district court nominees. In 1997, Republicans allowed only 50 percent of the pending district court nominees to be confirmed. In 1998, they hit their high mark in considering district court nominees and allowed 77 percent to be confirmed. In 1999, they were back down to allowing the confirmation of slightly over half, 58 percent, of the district court nominees to be confirmed. Finally, in 2000, again Republicans allowed only little more than half, or 56 percent, of the pending district court nominees to be confirmed.

In contrast, we have already had hearings for 100 percent of those district court nominees who were eligible for a hearing. We have had hearings for 66 district court nominees, voted 64 of them out of committee and, as of today, 60 of them have been confirmed by the Democratic-led Senate.

I would like to thank the members of the Judiciary Committee who have labored long and hard to evaluate the records of the individuals chosen by this President for lifetime appointments to the Federal courts. The decisions we make after reviewing their records will last well beyond the term of this President and will affect the lives of the individuals whose cases will be heard by these judges and maybe millions of others affected by the precedents of the decisions of these judges.

While the opposition party seeks to attribute the vacancy crisis in the Federal courts to the Democrats, who only recently became the majority party in the Senate, I remain hopeful that the American people will discover the truth behind such partisan accusations. Republicans are trying to take advantage of the vacancies they hoarded while waiting for a Republican President with an ideological approach to judicial nominations. Democrats are trying to clean up the vacancies mess that the Republican majority created. I am proud of the efforts of the Senate to restore fairness to the judicial confirmation process.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is working hard to schedule hearings and votes on the few remaining judicial nominees, but it takes time to deal with a mess of the magnitude we inherited. I think we have done well by the Federal courts and the American people, and we will continue to do our best to ensure that all Americans have access to federal judges who are unbiased, fair-minded individuals with appropriate judicial temperament and who are committed to upholding the Constitution and following precedent. When the President sends judicial candidates who embody these principles, we have tried to move quickly. When he sends controversial nominees whose records demonstrate that they lack these qualities and whose records are lacking, we will necessarily take more time to evaluate their merits.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise today in support of the confirmation of Terrence McVerry, who has been nominated to serve as a U.S. District Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Terrence McVerry has the breadth of experience and accomplishment we look for in a Federal judge. After graduating from law school, Mr. McVerry served in the U.S. Army Reserves and the Pennsylvania Air National Guard. He then went to work as an assistant district attorney for Allegheny County, prosecuting hundreds of trials with an emphasis in major felonies and homicides.

Mr. McVerry also has 17 years of civil litigation experience representing individuals in a variety of matters including personal injury, real estate, contracts, family matters, estate planning, and small businesses and corporations.

Mr. McVerry has been an able legislator, winning election to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives in 1979 and serving there for 21 years. In 1998 Governor Tom Ridge appointed him to fill a judicial vacancy on the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County in the Family Division. Currently Mr. McVerry is the solicitor of Allegheny County, acting as the chief legal officer and director of a governmental law department comprised of 36 attorneys.

I thank my colleagues for joining me in my unqualified support for Mr. McVerry.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I seek recognition today to express my strong approval of the Senate's confirmation of Mr. Terrence F. McVerry who President Bush nominated for the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. The American Bar Association has rated Mr. McVerry "unanimously well-qualified" to sit on the bench.

Mr. McVerry received his B.A. degree from Duquesne University in 1962 and his J.D. from Duquesne University School of Law in 1968. After finishing law school, Mr. McVerry started his legal career in the Allegheny County District Attorney's Office. He prosecuted hundreds of bench and jury trials with a concentration on major felonies and homicides. After serving in the District Attorney's Office, he and two colleagues formed their own private practice. He went on to serve as a partner in several other prestigious Pittsburgh firms.

Mr. McVerry has also served as a member of Pennsylvania House of Representatives and as a member of the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing. He served his country by joining the United States Army Reserve and the Pennsylvania Air National Guard. Former Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge nominated him to fill a judicial vacancy on the Court of Common Pleas to Allegheny County.

Currently, he serves as a Soldier for Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, where he is the chief legal officer and director of a governmental law department comprised of 36 attorneys. In this capacity, he is responsible for the representation of all branches and departments of a county government that has approximately 7,000 employees and responsible for nearly 1.3 million inhabitants.

Pennsylvania is fortunate to have an extremely well-qualified nominee like Mr. McVerry. This success is due to the bipartisan nominating commission which Senator SANTORUM and I have established. This commission reviews all federal judicial candidates and recommends individuals to Senator SANTORUM and myself. We then recommend these individuals to the President.

I thank my colleagues for their confirmation of Mr. Terrence McVerry to sit on the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to legislative session.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 1:01 p.m., recessed until 2:15 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CLELAND).

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed under Senator LIEBERMAN's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TERRORISM INSURANCE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have to believe that the President is not getting the right information from his staff; otherwise, knowing him, I cannot believe he would say some of the things he has said recently.

I was running yesterday morning, and on Public Radio I heard a preview of the speech the President was going to give before a union in Pennsylvania. And I thought they must have made a mistake. Then, later in the day, I heard him complete that speech, and he went ahead just as they had said on Public Radio.

As we consider homeland security and the measures we should take to defend America, I think it is important we talk about terrorism insurance. That is the issue I want to talk about. I believe the President has not received the proper information from his staff.

Following the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon about a year ago, many American businesses have had trouble purchasing affordable insurance covering acts of terrorism.

As a consequence, many construction projects and real estate transactions have been delayed, interrupted, and in some cases canceled. We are talking about billions of dollars worth of projects that have been stalled, some terminated, solely because of the lack of being able to purchase terrorism insurance.

These problems cost many American workers their jobs and prevent businesses from being as productive as they could be. Clearly, the lack of affordable terrorism insurance has had a harmful effect on our Nation's already troubled economy.

I am glad we are back from our break and the President is back from his vacation. However, as I have indicated, yesterday, the President made some statements relating to terrorism insurance, about the need for Congress to move forward on terrorism insurance, that simply were without any fact.

As millions of students across the country go back to school, I want them to understand that they must speak the truth. I repeat, I do not think the President said what he said yesterday based upon full knowledge of all the information.

The truth, Mr. President, is Senate Democrats—because I have been here offering the unanimous consent request for months—have been leading the effort to pass an effective terrorism insurance bill—and we started on this last year—while Republicans have delayed and attempted to thwart this important legislation time after time. The President should know that. The leadership in the Congress of his party has not allowed us to go forward on this legislation.

One of the statements he made before the union is: I am for hard hats, not trial lawyers.

This is terrorism insurance. We should move it forward. I am confident everyone can see through these statements the President made as being without fact.

I want to remind him and the people who give him advice—give him good information, good background information so he can speak with the full knowledge of the facts.

We are eager to pass terrorism insurance. We have done everything within our power to do that. This would help workers, businesses, and the Nation's economy.

Shortly after the terrorist attacks last year, our colleagues—Senators DODD, SARBANES, and SCHUMER—developed a strong bill to help businesses get the affordable terrorism insurance they badly need.

When we attempted to move this bill last December, the minority voiced no fundamental disagreement with the bill but argued over the number of amendments to be offered. This was done in an effort to prevent us from moving forward on this legislation. So we could not do it in December. We came right back and started on it. After having had many private attempts to get this legislation moving, we decided to go public and try to move it from the floor, right from where I stand.

We tried offering in early spring unanimous consent agreements to take up the terrorism insurance legislation. Again, there was no objection to the base text or that the Dodd-Sarbanes-Schumer bill should be the vehicle we would bring to the floor. They wanted some amendments. We wanted to treat this as any other legislation. They said let us agree on the number of amendments. Whatever number we came up with wasn't appropriate. We could not move it. Finally, they simply disagreed with bringing up the bill at all.

It is the right of the majority leader to decide which bills are brought to the floor. If the minority is opposed, they have the right to offer amendments and attempt to modify the text of the bill. We have offered to bring the bill up with amendments on each side so everyone could have the opportunity to make changes.

Nevertheless, the minority continued to object and further prevented us from passing the terrorism insurance legislation.

In April, the importance of the terrorism insurance legislation was enunciated by Secretary O'Neill in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee that the lack of terrorism insurance could cost America 1 percent of the GDP because major projects would not be able to get financing.

Finally, we were able to get an agreement that we could bring the bill to the floor. We passed the legislation. And then came weeks and weeks of more stalling by the minority. We could not get agreement on appointing conferees. We attempted and attempted and attempted. First, they were upset because the ratio was 3 to 2, which is fairly standard. They said they wanted 4 to 3. So we came back and said OK, and they still would not agree.

Finally, we were able to get agreement on the appointment of conferees. But now nothing is happening in the conference. We cannot do that alone. So I hope the record is clear. I know we refer to "the people downtown"—that is, the government representatives, the lobbyists who are concerned about this issue, the real estate and hotel owners, and these special interest groups. They know how we have tried to move this legislation. I only hope the people who have lost their jobs and are unable to move forward—these people in Pennsylvania yesterday who were told we are holding this up—understand that simply is not the truth.

So I certainly hope this legislation can be completed and we can have a bill sent to the President. It is the right thing to do. The legislation is important, and I hope we can do it sooner rather than later.

I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes of my time now to the Senator from Illinois who, I might say parenthetically, has been an extraordinarily thoughtful, constructive participant in the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee's consideration of the question of homeland security and, in that sense, has contributed mightily to the proposal we will put before the Chamber tonight. I am glad to yield 15 minutes to Senator DURBIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I thank Chairman LIEBERMAN for his leadership on the Governmental Affairs Committee. I think the record demonstrates that before the President called for the creation of a Department of Homeland Security, our committee, the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate, under Senator LIEBERMAN's leadership, proposed a law to create such a Department.

At the time, it is interesting because it was on a partisan roll call, if I remember correctly, nine Democrats for it, seven Republicans against it. We argued that a question of this magnitude, a challenge of this gravity, required a separate Department at that moment in time. Neither the President nor his loyal followers in the Senate were prepared to join us in that effort.

So I salute Senator LIEBERMAN for his leadership, and I am happy now that we have reached the point where we are speaking again, as we should when it comes to our Nation's defense, in a bipartisan manner. I hope that as we proceed to the debate on this bill, we can gather together again that same bipartisan force.

There is nothing that says Congress or the Senate have to agree on everything and, frankly, if we did, it would probably betray the principles and values of this Nation. But when it comes to our national security and defense, particularly the creation of a Department of this magnitude, I think it is all well and good that when the debate ends, we do try to find some common ground.

Our Government simply has to change and adapt to the challenge of international terrorism. A reorganization of this magnitude is not going to be simple—it is going to take some time—but this Congress is up to the task. Throughout our history, from 1789 when the first Congress created the first executive branch Departments of State, War, and Treasury, to 1988 when the latest Department, the Department of Veterans Affairs, was created, Congress has worked to make sure the Government was organized to do the job the American people asked of it.

Protecting our Nation's people is our highest priority. On March 15, 2001, almost 6 months before the attack on September 11, the U.S. Commission on National Security/21st Century, known by the shorthand name of the Hart-Rudman Commission, named after its co-chairmen the distinguished former Senators Gary Hart and Warren Rudman, released a report entitled "Road Map For National Security: An Imperative For Change." The Commission was, unfortunately, prescient in seeing the vulnerability of the United States to terrorism. The No. 1 recommendation of the Hart-Rudman Commission was to create a Department of Homeland Security.

It is worth quoting for the record some of the report that came out of the Commission. It says, the combination of unconventional weapons proliferation with the persistence of international terrorism will end the relative invulnerability of the U.S. homeland to catastrophic attack.

These words were written 6 months before September 11. They went on in their report to recommend the creation of an independent national homeland security agency, and they suggested there were some agencies of Government which naturally would come under the roof and under the authority of this new Department and quite effectively, or at least more effectively, defend the United States.

The blueprint they laid out was really the basis for this bill we have before us, the Senate version, the Governmental Affairs version, from Senator LIEBERMAN. The backbone of the new Department will be FEMA, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, along with the Departments guarding our borders and our perimeter. This new Department everyone sees as a way to protect our country more robustly.

Some have questioned, though, how a new Department and how reorganizing Government will really make us any safer. Right now there are more than 45 agencies in the Federal Government with some responsibility for homeland security. If we look at it, it is just too diffuse. It cannot be focused. It cannot be coordinated. In the words of my friend and former House colleague, Gov. Tom Ridge, we are going to, frankly, not have the force multipliers we need that organization and coordination will bring.

Some of my colleagues have charged we are moving too quickly. Well, I happen to agree with the premise that this race to enact this legislation by September 11 of this year, on the 1-year anniversary of that terrible disaster, was precipitous. It would have been a miracle if we had been able to create a bill that quickly which would have really met the task. It is better for us to take the additional time to do it right. To meet some self-imposed deadline or some deadline imposed by the press or our critics does not make a lot of sense when we are talking about a Department that is going to be facing the responsibility of protecting America for decades to come.

As a member of the committee, I want to report to our colleagues that I think our committee has done its job. This does not mean we should not debate the issue and deliberate on some alternatives and some modifications. What we have before us is an effort, backed by bipartisan work for many years under both Republican and Democrat chairmen. This committee has held 18 hearings since last September 11 setting up this new Department. It is a committee that has held a series of hearings over the last 4 or 5 years on the issues that are involved.

I remind my colleagues that this extensive body of work of this committee and its chairman allowed our committee to report out a bill on May 22. Once the President decided he wanted a similar Department, we tried to coordinate his intentions with our own. Realizing that all wisdom does not reside in one branch of Government or the other, we have listened to the President's suggestions. I am hopeful he will be open to our own.

One of the things I included in this as an element that was of particular personal interest related to the whole question of information technology. The proposal to restructure 28 agencies into a new, unified Homeland Security Department poses a complex challenge to integrate the system's infrastructure of our information technology to support the new Department's mission.

Let me get away from these high falutin' words, high sounding words, and get back to the real world where I live, because I am not part of this computer generation. I struggle with my own computers and e-mail to try to be up to speed. In the amendment that I adopted, what we are really saying to the Office of Management and Budget is: We want you to have a special person, a special group, assigned the responsibility to coordinate the architecture of the computers that are supposed to be cooperating and working together in all of the different intelligence agencies.

I am sorry to report to the Senate and to the people following this debate that that does not exist today. In fact, it has been a very low priority. If we look at the sorry state of affairs of computers at agencies such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation, we can certainly understand the need for this amendment. Currently, each of the agencies we expect to consolidate has its own separate information technology budget and program—the Coast Guard, Customs, FEMA, INS, Secret Service, Transportation Security Administration, and others. Each one has a unique system that does not necessarily have the capacity to communicate or coordinate these activities. Frankly, is that not what this debate is all about, so that all the agencies of the Federal Government will coordinate their resources, their authority, and their wisdom into one unified effort to create the force multiplier that Governor Ridge mentioned?

Because these divergent systems need to be linked, it is important to ask key questions now to ensure this new Department will help the agencies brought together and others outside to coordinate their communication and share information. It is equally important to establish appropriate links between the Homeland Security Department and other agencies, such as the CIA, the National Security Agency, the Department of Defense, the FBI, the State Department, and State and local officials, which may not be embraced under the Homeland Security Department's organizational umbrella.

Given the current state of affairs in the Federal information technology systems reflected in incomprehensible delays in meeting congressional mandates, I think this is long overdue. I will give two illustrations of why this is timely.

Six years ago, Congress mandated the Customs Department and INS to establish a database to record those exiting the United States with visitor's visas. Those coming into the United States in many instances need visas to be in the United States, and we thought we should keep track of those who are leaving so we will know the net number of visa holders in the United States, which can range in the tens of millions at any given time.

Six years ago, Congress said to the INS: Keep track of people leaving with a visa. Six years later, it is still not done. It has not been accomplished. The inspector general at the Department of Justice tells us it is years away.

So when Attorney General Ashcroft said, to make America safer, we are going to take the fingerprints and photographs of all people coming into the United States on a visa, I am sure people around America were nodding their heads saying, I guess that is necessary; it is certainly reasonable. Well, it is technologically impossible today to do it. We do not have the computer capability to keep track of people leaving the United States with a visa, let alone the millions coming into the United States on visas.

So for the Attorney General to make that suggestion is to say that he is going to go drill for oil on the Moon. It is not going to happen—not until we come a long way from where we are today.

We also said, incidentally, to the FBI and the Immigration and Naturalization Service: We notice that they both collect fingerprints. Can they merge their databases so that law enforcement agencies across the Federal Government, across the Nation, around the world, will have access to a common database of fingerprints collected by the United States? We asked them to do that 3 years ago. It still has not been done.

So when it comes to information technology, do not delude yourself into believing we are where we ought to be. We are not. The creation of this Department and the amendment which Senator LIEBERMAN and others were happy to accept and said nice things about, I hope will move forward in achieving that goal.

The enterprise architecture and resulting systems must be designed for interoperability between many different agencies. I hope we get this achieved quickly.

I have had a great deal of frustration, even anger, over the lack of progress we have made since September 11. To have the new person in charge of information technology from the FBI testify before the Judiciary Committee saying it will be 2 years before the FBI is up to speed with their computers is totally unacceptable. Members should not stand for that one second. To think one can go to any computer store in any major city in America and buy computers with better capability than the computers of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is shameful. That exists today; it should change. This bill will be part of the change.

Also, I raise another issue briefly. After the events of September 11, we heard from a number of people—Governor Ridge, Secretary Thompson of the Department of Health and Human Services—about concern for our Nation's food supply and its vulnerability to attack. We have to be mindful and sensitive. I thank Senator LIEBERMAN for including my language on food safety and security in this legislation, directing the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a detailed study to review all Federal statutes and regulations affecting the safety and security of the food supply, as well as the current organizational structure of food safety oversight to figure out if we can do it better. I think we can. I believed that for a long time. I pushed for better coordination, better definition, better objectives for food safety. Now, this is a different level. It is not a question of food that can be contaminated by natural causes, but food that could be jeopardized and contaminated by enemies of the United States. It is part of the same consideration but raises it to a much higher level.

I close by thanking Senator LIEBERMAN for his leadership on this issue. This reorganization is complicated. Although we are a great deliberative body, we have to roll up our sleeves and deal with it. We approach the anniversary of September 11 and know further attacks are not only possible, but in many instances our open society invites them. We do not have the luxury of waiting. If there were another attack since last September 11, this bill would have passed out of here a lot sooner. Now that we have the time to do it, let's do it and do it right.

I thank Senator LIEBERMAN for his leadership, and I yield the floor.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank Senator DURBIN for his statement and for the contributions he made substantively to the proposal and for his eloquent advocacy for the urgent necessity to get together and create a Department of Homeland Security.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from Maine?

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I yield myself as much time as I may consume from the time of Senator THOMPSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the legislation before the Senate that will result in the most significant reorganization of the executive branch in more than 50 years. The creation of a Cabinet-level Department of Homeland Security is of fundamental importance to our national security. I believe it is one of the most important pieces of legislation we will consider during this Congress.

In the year since the terrorist attacks on our Nation, much has been done to make our country more secure. Congress has approved billions of dollars to secure our borders, protect critical infrastructure, train and equip first responders, and better detect and respond to a bioterrorism attack. Our brave men and women in uniform have been fighting valiantly in Afghanistan and have succeeded in many of the goals in the war against terrorism.

The creation of the Department of Homeland Security is another important step in our efforts to secure our Nation against another terrorist attack. This sweeping reorganization dwarfs any corporate merger that you can think of. It involves some 200,000 employees and nearly $40 billion in budget. The task before the Senate is truly daunting, and it is important we get the job done right.

Currently, as many as 100 Federal agencies are responsible for homeland security. But not one of them has homeland security as its principal mission. That is the problem with our current organizational structure. With that many entities responsible, nobody is accountable and turf battles and bureaucratic disputes are virtually inevitable.

If we are to overcome these problems and create a national security structure that can defend our Nation, we must unite the current patchwork of agencies into a single new Department of Homeland Security. This agency would work to secure our borders, help protect our ports, our transportation sector, and protect our critical infrastructure. It would synthesize and analyze homeland security intelligence from multiple sources, thus lessening the possibility of intelligence breakdowns or lack of communication. Furthermore, the new domestic security structure would coordinate Federal communications regarding threats and preparedness with State and local governments, as well as with the private sector.

Our efforts to create a new Department of Homeland Security will help to remedy many of the current weaknesses of the past and thus help to protect us against future terrorist attacks.

As a member of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which held extensive hearings on the reorganization legislation, I have had the opportunity to consider a multitude of ideas and concepts regarding the creation of the new Department. We heard excellent testimony from Governor Ridge, from the Directors of the FBI and the CIA, and from a host of other experts. They all shed light on the problems that are created by our current disorganization in the area of homeland security. They all shed light on the problems that have impaired our ability to defend our homeland and on the threats that we now face and inevitably will face in the future.

During the committee's consideration of this bill, I expressed concerns that in our effort to create a new Department, we must be careful to protect the traditional missions, the very important missions of the agencies that are being assembled into this giant new department. In particular, I believe the Coast Guard's traditional functions, such as search and rescue and marine resource protection, must be protected and maintained.

Since the tragic events of September 11, the Coast Guard's focus has shifted dramatically to homeland security. I talked with Coast Guard officers in Portland, ME, who told me the amount of time they are now spending on port security operations and inspecting foreign vessels coming into the harbor in Portland. I have no doubt these are very important missions and that the Coast Guard plays an essential role in homeland security. And I believe it should play a leading role in the new Department. However, we know the Coast Guard cannot continue to focus on homeland security missions without jeopardizing its traditional focus. I am concerned that if the current resource allocation is maintained and the Coast Guard continues to perform these new homeland security responsibilities, its traditional missions will be sacrificed.

The President's budget goes a long way to try to remedy this problem by allocating significant new funds for the Coast Guard. But we also need to make sure the organizational structure in the new Department also safeguards the Coast Guard's traditional mission.

For example, prior to September 11, port security missions accounted for approximately 2 percent of the Coast Guard's resources. Immediately following the terrorist attacks, the Coast Guard deployed 59 percent of its resources to port security and safety missions. As a result, many of the aircraft and vessels traditionally used for search and rescue were far removed from their optimal locations for that function. Even after the immediate impact of the September 11 attacks subsided, its impact on the resources of the Coast Guard remained. Indeed, from April through June of this year, the Coast Guard devoted 9 percent fewer hours on search and rescue missions than it did in the year before.

Because of the Coast Guard's importance to coastal areas throughout our Nation, any reduction in its traditional functions is cause for great concern. Those of us who represent coastal States know how absolutely vital the mission of the Coast Guard is. Last year alone, the Coast Guard performed over 39,000 search and rescue missions and saved more than 4,000 lives. On a typical day, the Coast Guard interdicts and rescues 14 illegal immigrants, inspects and repairs 135 buoys, helps over 2,500 commercial ships navigate in and out of U.S. ports, and saves 10 lives. That is on a typical day. In short, the Coast Guard's traditional missions are of vital importance and they simply must be preserved.

Let me take a moment to talk about the Coast Guard's impact and its importance in my home State of Maine. Each year, the Coast Guard performs about 300 search and rescue missions in my State. These missions are literally a matter of life and death. Since October of 1999, 14 commercial fishermen have lost their lives at sea. Commercial fishing is one of the most dangerous of occupations, and the Coast Guard every year saves fishermen who get into trouble. How many more would have died or been injured if the nearest Coast Guard cutter had not been in port? How many more fishermen or recreational boaters will lose their lives if the local Coast Guard stations must devote the vast majority of their time to homeland security functions?

I agree that the Coast Guard must perform homeland security functions. The role the Coast Guard is playing in securing our ports is vitally important. But it is also vitally important that it not do so at the expense of its traditional missions.

To respond to this challenge, Senator STEVENS of Alaska and I teamed up to offer an amendment during the Governmental Affairs Committee markup of this legislation. We offered a successful amendment to preserve the traditional functions of the Coast Guard, even as the agency is moved into the new Department of Homeland Security. I want to recognize Senator STEVENS and thank him for his leadership on this issue, as well as recognize the support of our colleagues who voted for our amendment in committee.

Our amendment establishes the right balance between homeland security functions and the traditional missions of the Coast Guard. It ensures that the Coast Guard's non-homeland-security functions shall be maintained after its transfer into the new Department but also provides for flexibility in the event of a national emergency or an attack on our Nation.

The amendment also has the Commandant of the Coast Guard report directly to the Secretary. In the chairman's draft, he would not have done so. Thus, his role would have been devalued or demoted. Our amendment, the Stevens-Collins amendment, remedies that problem.

Our amendment will help to protect our coastal communities' economies, their way of life, and their loved ones, while Americans, wherever they live, can rest assured that the Coast Guard will perform its necessary and vital homeland security functions. I believe our language strikes the right balance.

As we craft this bill, it is also important that we never forget who is on the front lines in the event of a national emergency. We learned on September 11 who responds. It is not the response of people in Washington. The people who are on the front lines are our police officers, our firefighters, and our emergency medical personnel. That is why we need to make sure the new Department coordinates its activities and supports the activities of the local first responders.

I thank Senator FEINGOLD for his leadership in ensuring that the interests of the first responders are ever in our mind. I worked with him as well as with Senator CARPER on an amendment in committee that strengthens the role of first responders in homeland security, that recognizes their contributions.

We offered an amendment to enhance the cooperation and coordination among State and local first responders. The new Department will be required to designate an employee to be based in each and every 1 of the 50 States to be a liaison to State and local governments. I think that is so important. And it recognizes that this is a joint effort.

Similarly, an amendment Senator CARNAHAN and I offered will help our community fire departments by expanding the current grant program known as the FIRE Program. As I am sure the Presiding Officer knows, because he represents a rural State, as I do, the FIRE Program has been so important in helping a lot of our small, rural fire departments upgrade their equipment and their training.

The amendment the Senator from Missouri and I offered in committee would expand the FIRE Program and provide fire departments with the ability over 3 years to receive maximum grants of $100,000 to hire personnel. When I talk to my fire chiefs at home, they tell me that not only do they need help with equipment and training but they need more firefighters.

For those of us who went to New York City, one of the memories I will carry with me forever was talking with the fire commissioner and learning how many firefighters lost their lives on September 11. I will never forget his telling me that more firefighters died on that day than in the previous 70 years of the New York City Fire Department. It is the firefighters, the police officers, the emergency medical personnel who are always first on the scene. We cannot forget that these brave individuals will be the first to be called upon if and when a terrorist attack again occurs.

The New Department of Homeland Security is an essential component of our response to current and future threats. As the brutal attacks of September 11 demonstrated, distance from our enemies and the barriers of oceans no longer guarantee the security of our homeland. The bill we are considering today is another important step in preserving and strengthening our homeland security. I believe this legislation will help to make our Nation more secure, and I am hopeful that we will pass it quickly after due consideration.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes from the time controlled by Senator BYRD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are here today for three major reasons. The first is the obvious need to restructure our security to confront new threats that were unanticipated in the cold war. The thought is that we do need to create a Department of Homeland Security. I support that. We are also here today because of the groundbreaking work of Senator LIEBERMAN and colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee. Before this proposal was invoked by the administration, they were working on it. They were developing through hearings the substance to make the presentation for which we are here today. But finally, we are here today because of Senator BYRD's insistence that we consider this very significant reorganization in the context of our Constitution and of our responsibility as Members of the Senate to ensure we maintain the constitutional balance that is the heart of this Government.

It would be ironic indeed that in the name of winning the war on terror, we lost the very goal we were trying to protect, which is a constitutional government in which all of us play a significant role—the executive, the legislature, and the judiciary.

I think it is important, as we consider this legislation, to look carefully and thoughtfully at this proposed reorganization. It is an extraordinary combination of governmental entities. Approximately 170,000 employees will be combined into this new Department. It will affect 22 existing agencies. At least 11 full Senate committees have oversight responsibilities for these existing agencies.

This is an extraordinary moment, and we have to act deliberately, carefully, and thoughtfully. That is why I think it is so critical that this debate take place and why it was so important that Senator BYRD was able to indeed encourage and inspire and in many respects direct the debate we are having today.

One of the major elements within this organization—there are many, and I would like to allude to a few—is the treatment of intelligence. We understood very starkly and very tragically on September 11 that intelligence is probably the key to successful protection of the United States, our home. We understood that. And now we have to take that lesson and apply it.

One of the proposals made by the administration is to create an intelligence capacity within the new Department of Homeland Security. I agree with that. I think this new Department has to have an intelligence capacity. Unfortunately, in terms of the administration's proposal, I think there are two clear shortcomings. First, they have established the intelligence capacity in the context of the infrastructure protection responsibilities of this new Department. Clearly, intelligence has to go beyond simply protecting our infrastructure.

As Senator LIEBERMAN indicated previously in some of his comments, the World Trade Center and other targets were not properly considered critical infrastructure in the United States. But certainly on September 11 it was the target of terrorists. I think we have to disassociate the intelligence aspects of the Department in the very narrow view of infrastructure protection.

The amendment which Senator LIEBERMAN will propose once we move to the bill will effectively address the issue and the problems.

There is also another problem; that is, the administration would only allow this intelligence operation within the new Homeland Security Department to take data provided by other agencies and analyze it. It does not give that entity the right to reach out and get raw intelligence data. I think that has to be a critical responsibility and a critical authority of this new intelligence division.

Again, the bill that I believe Senator LIEBERMAN will submit at the conclusion of this debate will have that authority in the Homeland Security Department. That is critical.

The essence here is to have a place in the Government where—as said so often because it is so true—all the dots are connected. But you can't do that and rely on the intelligence products of other agencies. You can't do that if your focus is restricted to infrastructure protection.

As a result, I think this is illustrative of some of the problems of the administration's proposal, and certainly some of the problems of the House bill. I should point out, as has been pointed out before, that we are now debating whether the Senate will bring it up for consideration.

There are other areas that are of concern to me. One has just been discussed quite articulately by my colleague and friend from Maine, Senator COLLINS; that is the Coast Guard. Here is an agency which, after September 11, has been decisively engaged in port protection. Port protection by the Coast Guard has gone from a rather minor operation before September 11 to one of their major operations. We have all seen that. In my community of Providence, RI, we have the Narragansett Bay. We have the Port of Providence. For the first time in my memory—and perhaps since World War II—we are seeing Coast Guard cutters escorting LNG tankers through the Narragansett Bay while the whole waterway was shut down by police and the National Guard. That is a time-consuming operation and one which has been replicated in the 361 ports of the United States. Also adding to that is the Coast Guard's obligation to patrol about 95,000 miles of coastline.

The problem, though, is, as my colleague from Maine pointed out, that the Coast Guard has many other responsibilities. She referred to a typical day. On a typical day, the Coast Guard conducts 109 search and rescue missions, saves 10 lives, assists 92 boaters in trouble, and seizes 169 pounds of marijuana and 360 pounds of cocaine worth about $9.6 million. They intercept illegal immigrants coming into the United States. They respond to calls with respect to hazardous chemical spills. They inspect and repair boats. They assist nearly 200,000 tons of shipping just in the Great Lakes during the winter season alone. What will happen to these other responsibilities?

I know the committee has dealt with this and has tried to strike a balance. But it is an area of concern, and it is an area that illustrates the difficulty of combining all of these agencies with the mission of homeland security which might trump other legitimate missions. We have to be careful with this. In the course of our debate and discussion, I think we have to focus on this issue and other issues.

Much can be said in a similar vein about the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Here you have an agency which has two major responsibilities: Protect the borders from illegal entry and at the same time provide assistance to those individuals who are in the United States legally who want to become citizens or who are here on some type of temporary protective status and need to be supervised by the United States. Those are diametrically opposed responsibilities.

We have to ask ourselves the question: If the INS is part of the Department of Homeland Security, will they emphasize one and de-emphasize the other? I think, frankly, most people will assume they will emphasize protecting the borders of the United States. After all, that is probably the most important issue with respect to homeland security.

What happens to the literally millions of individuals in the United States who legitimately need the services of the INS? Already today, there is a backlog of approximately 5 million cases around the country in terms of applications to the INS for clarification of status. Indeed, as the National Immigration Forum noted in their words, "it is hard to imagine that a Federal agency whose primary issue is to deter terrorism will be able to strike and maintain an appropriate balance between admitting newcomers and deterring security threats."

We see that these contradictions are replete throughout the reorganization. I again think a careful, thorough, and complete deliberation should be attendant to the consideration of this legislation.

I would like to mention just briefly a final area, an area which I think will come back again and again; that is, the administration's proposal—and the proposal in the House of Representatives—to put up severe barriers to the right of Federal employees to organize collectively and to exercise their rights; and, also, the protection for the Civil Service.

We have to be very conscious of this and ask the very fundamental question: Why are we attempting to undercut provisions for which no one, I think, has seriously made the case they have interfered with our ability to conduct the war on terror, to conduct intelligence operations?

As you probably realize, President Kennedy, 40 years ago, under executive order, gave Federal employees the right to organize in collective bargaining units. President Nixon expanded those rights in 1969. In 1978, the Civil Service Reform Act codified most of these executive orders.

Throughout the course of our history, these responsibilities have also given the President the authority to make exemptions for national security. And they have made those exemptions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 10 minutes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield one additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Over the course of our history, certainly in the 40 years, since these rights became established by executive order, there have always been appropriate exemptions in which the President could, for national security reasons, exempt individual employees or groups of employees from these rights. Our Presidents have done that. As a result, we have a situation in which I think a classic statement applies: If it is not broke, why are we trying to fix it? And it is not broken.

Again, in my final few moments, I heard from my colleague from Maine—and I have heard it again and again—those firefighters struggling up the stairs of the World Trade Center were union employees. No one checked with their bargaining agent before going up those stairs. In fact, I don't think they even checked with some of their captains and battalion commanders. They went up those upstairs because it was their job and their duty and their lives. And many of them paid with their lives.

It is that spirit that emanates from those firefighters that encourages and embraces all dedicated civil servants in our Federal Government. I think to pursue this initiative is really, in a way, a slap at them, an insult to what they bring each and every day to their jobs, to their tasks, to their duty.

So I hope we adopt provisions, which I believe the Lieberman bill has, which recognize the right to organize, the right for civil service protections, and also flexibility, for management, by the President.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time does the distinguished Senator from South Carolina wish to have?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Thirty minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I ask the Senator, could you make it 20? Could we try for 20 to start with?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will try to start with 20.

Mr. BYRD. I certainly want to be considerate with this Senator, this very senior Member of the body. And I am glad that he is a Member at this time.

Let's say 20 minutes at this point. My time is limited, but let's start with that and see how we come out.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, right quickly, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island was talking about the firemen running up those steps. It brings to mind 4 years ago the creation of the Office of Domestic Preparedness by this Congress.

We were confronting terrorism long before 9/11. Mr. President, 144,000 individuals have been through schools in Nevada, New Mexico, Louisiana, Texas, and Alabama. There are five big schools there to train the first responders. And that training has been really salutary in the sense that in the state of New York we have had over 17,000 first responders who were trained in the ODP program. So I say to the Senator, many who rushed up those steps had received the training and were responding in accordance with the foreseeability that we had in the congressional branch with respect to terrorism.

I jump right quickly, with my time limited, to the hearings that we had. We hear so much about Hart-Rudman. We had hearings in the Senate, not just deciding on Hart-Rudman, that large bureaucracy, but, on the contrary, after 3 days of hearings in the State-Justice-Commerce Subcommittee of Appropriations we came down with a further beefing up of the Office of Domestic Preparedness. At the present time, ODP has a budget of $1.2 billion. We already have at the desk, unanimously approved by the Appropriations Committee and ready for debate, an increase of $1 billion, some $2.2 billion.

In short, we were on the floor of the Senate on 9/11 debating terrorism. I emphasize that because they go right to the point and say they don't believe in domestic security.

We have been working on domestic security since immediately after 9/11. I got together—and I must tell this story because it has already passed me with respect to the gun crowd—but be that as it may, I sat down with the El Al chief pilot from Israel who flew over from Tel Aviv and sat down and talked with us, myself and about four other Senators.

At that seating, he emphasized the security of the cockpit door because I asked him: Sir, how is it that El Al, the airline most subject to be under the gun, where the terrorists do not even wait now, for example, to get to a plane—they shoot up the ticket counter like they did out in Los Angeles—that you have not had a hijacking in 30 years?

He said: There is one way to prevent hijackings. Secure the cockpit door, and never open that door in flight.

Let me emphasize, he said: My wife can be assaulted in the cabin. I would go straight to the ground, and law enforcement would meet me there.

In flight, you do not want to give responsibility to the pilots for law and order. You give the pilots the responsibility for flying the plane. If they have the responsibility, with a gun, for law and order, then they have made a bad mistake because the pilots cannot prevent a plane from being hijacked. The enemy is not a single hijacker. There are teams of terrorists, suicidal terrorists, who do not mind losing their lives. And, yes, you can stop one or two, maybe, but the next three will take that plane over, and you will have a 9/11.

I think our responsibility in this particular debate is—in addition to going up to New York on Friday, in addition to having the debate here, and a whole day turned over on next Wednesday, which I commend—but the main thing is for us to act and assume the responsibility that a 9/11 never happens again.

Once you secure that door—Delta Airlines has gone along with it, JetBlue is going along with it, but we are still debating it.

We immediately moved for airline security. We passed it 100-0 in a bipartisan bill. You see in the morning paper it is not turf. This Senate voted to put the Transportation Security Administration in the Justice Department. I was not trying to hold it because I am chairman of the Transportation Committee. I have commerce, science, and transportation. I was not trying to hold it in my committee. I voted to put it in Justice and defended this position on the House side arguing that Justice would get it up and going.

Instead I got a bureaucrat who was more interested in the logo and his office equipment and did not even talk to the airline managers. We confirmed—the pressure was on—before Christmas.

We voted without the committee confirming this particular gentlemen. We just reported it out and we had a vote on it without any debate whatsoever. But now we are behind the curve and we have Admiral Malloy over there, and I think he is a great man, and I think we can do a lot of repairing and we are going to be realistic about what we can accomplish. There is no use arguing about what kind of terminal dates and everything else. We live in the real world and we must work together.

We put in rail security, we put in seaport security before Christmas of last year. You don't find the administration pressuring the House to get going to pass it. They are still fussing about fees and taxes over there. They don't want to pay for it. It is domestic politics, reelection, not seaport security.

So there we are. We can go down the list of all the work we have done on it, and here comes this bill and what does it do? It organizes every entity that did not fail, like the Coast Guard, FEMA, and the Agriculture Department and everything else, and ignores the ones that did fail. 9/11 was an intelligence failure, and you will not get that out of the Select Committee on Intelligence that is investigating between the House and Senate because the entities of this administration—I am not saying the President knew anything will not be embarrassed. I am sure if the President knew anything he would have put measures in place to avoid it. But I can tell you here and now that the committee that is investigating is not going to speak out about the intelligence failure because it would reflect, if you please, poorly on the President's management of their FBI, their CIA, their National Security Agency.

I have been on the Intelligence Committee. In fact, I started in this work in 1954 on the Hoover Commission. The same problem we had almost 50 years ago with the FBI talking to the CIA, and the CIA talking to the FBI, persists today. I have gotten together with Bob Mueller, and he is a good man. He has hired some CIA officials. Last year before Thanksgiving, we gave him $750 million to clean up his computerization. He reorganized the Department and instituted a Department of Domestic Intelligence and now is talking, I understand, to George Tenet, the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The CIA failed on 9/11. We already had the blowing up of the World Trade Towers almost 10 years ago. But the CIA said we didn't know a plane could be used. They did not know a plane could be used? They had the direct record in 1994.

In 1994, they had the Islamic group that was going to blow up the Eiffel Tower. Then, in 1995, they were working on a case out there in the Philippines where they uncovered a plan to blow up 12 planes at one time. The documents revealed that the terrorists, who had links to al Qaeda, planned to ram a plane into the CIA building itself. But now they say they had no idea you could fly a plane into a building. Then al-Qaida blew up our embassies and blew up the USS Cole. They knew.

Right to the point, they had warned about this crowd so much so that the President actually had on his desk on September 10—the day before—a plan to attack Afghanistan. We had the intelligence. We just were not paying attention. The FBI also failed. There isn't any question about that. We know about the flight schools in Arizona. Agent Williams sent notice saying: There is something wrong. These people of Mideastern descent are trying to learn how to fly. We believe they are connected to fundamentalist groups, something's not right to me.

That word never did get up to the head of the FBI or the President of the United States. That was an intelligence failure. But we had the woman—Agent Coleen Rowley, I think her name was. When they arrested Moussaoui in Minnesota, they became so exercised she wrote a memo that: Look, this fellow doesn't want to learn how to take-off or land. He only wants to learn how to fly. We need to investigate him further. But the Minnesota field office was denied permission for a warrant.

Why should we investigate him further? Because he was training to run a plane into the World Trade Towers. That is the record. I am not on any Intelligence Committee. I am not giving you any security information. If you want any kind of information along that line, there is a wonderful article that appeared in Time magazine on May 27, 2002.

I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

HOW THE U.S. MISSED THE CLUES

(By Michael Elliott)

None of this is pretty. In the immediate aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks, members of the American political establishment stood together, determined to fight the war against terrorism, supporting those in military uniform and the buttoned-down bureaucrats whose job it was to make sure that something so awful would not happen again. Everyone—inside the Bush Administration as well as outside it—knew there had been massive failures of intelligence in the period before the attacks. But after Sept. 11, the Administration earned a reputation for steely-eyed competence, and its political opponents couched their legitimate criticism in language politer than that to which Washington is accustomed. That was then. In the past month, a series of disclosures have cast doubt on the most basic abilities of the national-security establishment. The Administration has looked alternately shifty and defensive; Democrats—some of them presidential candidates-in-waiting—have postured on motormouth TV. And the nation has been forced into a period of painful second-guessing, asking whether Sept. 11 could have been prevented. In August, it turns out, the President was briefed by the CIA on the possibility that al-Qaeda, the terrorist network headed by Osama bin Laden, might use hijacked airliners to win concessions from the U.S. Sources tell TIME that the briefing, which was first reported by CBS News, was in response to a request by Bush for detailed information on the kind of threat posed by al-Qaeda, not to American interests overseas—which had long preoccupied the spooks—but at home. During the period in which the brief was prepared, says a senior intelligence official, the CIA came to the conclusion that “al-Qaeda was determined to attack the U.S.” After the strike came, White House sources concede, the Administration made a conscious decision not to disclose the August briefing, hoping that it would be discussed “in context”—and months later—when congressional investigations into the attacks eventually got under way. And that wasn't the only embarrassing paper kept under wraps. Earlier this month, the Associated Press reported new details from a July 2001 memo by an FBI agent in Phoenix, Ariz., who presciently noted a pattern of Arab men signing up at flight schools. The agent, Kenneth Williams, 42, has spent 11 years working in an FBI antiterrorism task force. He recommended an investigation to determine whether al-Qaeda operatives were training at the schools. He was ignored, and after the existence of the memo became known, the FBI insisted that even if it had been acted upon, it would not have led to the detention of the Sept. 11 hijackers. (Only one of them, Hani Hanjour, had trained in Arizona, and did so before Williams focused on flight school.) But sources tell TIME that at least one of the men Williams had under watch—a Muslim who has now left the U.S.—did indeed have al-Qaeda links. And Williams identified a second pair of suspected Islamic radicals now living in the U.S. as resident aliens, the sources say. They are currently under FBI surveillance. As if those missed signals weren't enough, last week it was also disclosed that in August, when the U.S. detained Zacarias

Moussaoui—a man the French government knew was associated with Islamic extremists and who apparently wanted to learn to fly jumbo jets but not land them, and has since been charged with complicity in the Sept. 11 attacks—the FBI told nobody in the White House's Counterterrorism Security Group. But the CSG, which comes under the aegis of National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, is supposed to coordinate the government's response to terrorist threats.

At high levels of government, the awful possibility is dawning that things could have been different. "If we'd had access to Moussaoui, if we'd had access to the Phoenix memo, could we have broken up the plot?" asks a White House official who works on counterterrorism. Then he answers his own question: "We would have taken action, and there's at least a distinct possibility that we may at the very least have delayed it." Bush was outraged at the suggestion that he might have been warned about impending strikes and failed to act. To ward off Democratic criticism, Vice President Dick Cheney warned against trying to "seek political advantage" from the new revelations; such commentary, he said, "is thoroughly irresponsible and totally unworthy of national leaders in a time of war." He should have saved his breath; the blame game is under way, long before the lessons of all that happened last summer have been absorbed. And one thing we now know: there plenty of blame to go around.

George W. Bush, they say, is a quick study, and last summer he needed to be. Threats and warnings of possible terrorist outrages against American interests were howling into Washington like a dirty blizzard. Fighting terrorism hadn't been a top priority in the early months of the Administration; cutting taxes, building a missile shield and other agenda had crowded it out. Bush's national-security aides had been warned during the transition that there was an al-Qaeda presence in the U.S., but in the first months of the Administration, says one official, a sense of urgency was lacking: "They were new to this stuff."

By the time Bush left for a month's vacation on his ranch in Crawford, Texas, on Aug. 4, that mood had changed. Where the President goes, the responsibilities of office follow, and so, each morning, Bush sat in the ranch office and received the CIA's Presidential Daily Brief. The brief—or PDB, in Langley-speak—is the CIA's chance to mainline its priorities into the President's thinking. Each day, the PDB is winnowed to a few pages; when the President is in Washington, one of two "briefers"—agency up-and-comers who flesh out the written text—gets to work at 2 a.m. to bone up on background material. The brief itself is delivered at 8 a.m. in front of the President's national-security team. (Sometimes CIA Director George Tenet delivers it himself.) One briefer had moved to Texas for the vacation, and the PDB was transmitted to Crawford over a secure system. At the briefing on Monday, Aug. 6—a day when the Texas heat would reach 100 [degrees]—Bush received a 1½-page document, which, according to Rice, was an "analytic report" on al-Qaeda. Included was a mention that al-Qaeda might be tempted to hijack airliners, perhaps so that they might use hostages to secure the release of an al-Qaeda leader or sympathizer. Rice was not present but discussed the briefing with Bush immediately after it had ended, as she always does.

They had much to talk about. Throughout the summer, top officials had become convinced, with a growing sense of foreboding, that a major operation by al-Qaeda was in the works. For many in the loop, it seemed likely that any attack would be aimed at Americans overseas. But sources tell TIME that the Aug. 6 briefing had a very different focus; it was explicitly concerned with terrorism in the homeland. The Aug. 6 briefing had been put together, says one official, because the President had told Tenet, "Give me a sense of what al-Qaeda can do inside the U.S." At a press conference last week, Rice said the brief concentrated on the history and methods of al-Qaeda. Since much of the material in it was a rehash of intelligence dating to 1997 and '98, it is doubtful that it was much use in answering Bush's question.

According to Rice, there was just a sentence or two on hijacking—and the passage did not address the possibility that a hijacked plane would ever be flown into a building. That was the first of four crucial mistakes made last summer. Administration officials insisted all last week that turning a plane into a suicide bomb was something that nobody had contemplated. But that just isn't so. In 1995, authorities in the Philippines scuppered a plan—masterminded by Ramzi Yousef, who had also plotted the 1993 World Trade Center bombing—for mass hijackings of American planes over the Pacific. Evidence developed during the investigation of Yousef and his partner, Abdul Hakim Murad, uncovered a plan to crash a plane into CIA headquarters in Langley, Va. And as long ago as 1994, in an incident that is well known among terrorism experts, French authorities foiled a plot by the Algerian Armed Islamic Group to fly an airliner into the Eiffel Tower. "Since 1994," says a French investigator into al-Qaeda cases, "we should all have been viewing kamikaze acts as a possibility for all terrorist hijackings." But if Rice's account is accurate, nobody significant in the Bush Administration did.

There might have been more discussion of the risks of hijackings in the President's briefing if its writers had known about the Phoenix memo. But they hadn't seen it, nor had anyone in the CIA or the White House. Yet Senator Richard Shelby, the ranking Republican on the Senate Intelligence Committee, calls the memo, which is said to contain detailed descriptions of named suspects, "one of the most explosive documents I've seen in eight years." The memo, on which the Senate Intelligence Committee was briefed last November, has now become the focus of a huge political row in Washington. Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee—including Republican Arlen Specter, who had an angry exchange over the memo with FBI Director Robert Mueller on Saturday—are desperate to see it, and may yet subpoena it. "The fact that the Phoenix memo died on Somebody's desk takes your breath away," says Senator Richard Durbin, a Democratic committee member from Illinois. "They just shuffled it off."

Agent Williams wrote the memo on July 5, detailing his suspicions about some Arabs he had been watching, who he thought were Islamic radicals. Several of the men had enrolled at Embury-Riddle Aeronautical University in Prescott, Ariz. Williams posited that bin Laden's followers might be trying to infiltrate the civil-aviation system as pilots, security guards or other personnel, and he recommended a national program to track suspicious flight-school students. The memo was sent to the counterterrorism division at FBI headquarters in Washington and to two field offices, including the counterterrorism section in New York, which has had long experience in al-Qaeda investigations.

That experience counted for nothing. In all three offices, the memo was pretty much ignored, disappearing into the black hole of bureaucratic hell that is the FBI. That was the second key mistake. Sources tell TIME that the memo was never forwarded—not even to the level of Mike Rolince, chief of the international-terrorism section. "The thing fell into the laps of people who were grossly overtaxed," says a senior FBI official. The G-men claim to have been swamped by tips about coming al-Qaeda operations. But Williams was onto something. The flight students he was tracking were supporters of radical Islamic groups. Some of them, sources say, are believed to be connected to Hamas and Hizballah, terrorist organizations based in the Middle East, while at least one other—who has left the U.S.—had links to al-Qaeda. Another pair mentioned in the memo, neither of whom attended flight school, are the ones under FBI surveillance—which, sources say, is the reason Mueller won't make the memo public.

However fevered the analysis of the Williams memo is now, it didn't get much attention when it was written. Last July, FBI headquarters wasn't concentrating on an attack within the U.S. "Nobody was looking domestically," says a recently retired FBI official. "We didn't think they had the people to mount an operation here."

That was the third huge mistake—and a somewhat baffling conclusion to draw, given the evidence at hand. In spring of 2001, Ahmed Ressam, the "millennium bomber," was on trial in Los Angeles, charged with being part of a plot to bomb Los Angeles International Airport and other locations at the end of 1999. In her press conference last week, Rice conceded that in 2001 the FBI "was involved in a number of investigations of potential al-Qaeda personnel operating in the United States."

But investigators had some reasons for being preoccupied with attacks and threats outside the U.S. Al-Qaeda's most notorious blows against American interests had taken place in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam, the sites of the 1998 embassy bombings, and in Yemen, where the U.S.S. Cole was bombed in October 2002. And in the first half of last year, the CSG monitored information suggesting the likelihood of another attack overseas. In June 2001, the State Department issued a worldwide caution warning American citizens of possible attacks. That month, says a recently retired senior FBI official, "we were constantly worried that something was going to happen. Our best guesstimate was something in Southeast Asia." A French investigator involved in al-Qaeda cases confirms the thought. "The prevailing logic from around 1998," he says, "was that al-Qaeda and bin Laden had very openly designated America as its prime target—but it was a target that it preferred to attack outside the U.S."

By July the level of noise about terrorism from intelligence sources around the world was deafening. The CSG, then chaired by Richard Clarke, a Clinton Administration holdover who was consumed with terrorist threats to the point of obsession, was meeting almost every day. A specific threat was received on the life of Bush, who was due to visit Genoa, Italy, for a G-8 summit that month. Roland Jacquard, a leading French expert on terrorism, says that when Russian and Western intelligence agencies compared notes before the summit, they were stunned to find they all had information indicating that a strike was in the offing. When the Genoa summit passed without incident, says a French official, attention turned to the possibility of attacks on U.S. bases in Belgium and Turkey. Then, at the end of July, Djamel Beghal, a Franco-Algerian al-Qaeda associate, was picked up in Dubai on his way from Afghanistan back to Europe. Beghal started talking and implicated a network of al-Qaeda operatives in Europe, who, he said, were planning to blow up the American embassy in Paris. (Beghal, who has since been extradited to France, has said his confession was coerced.) "We shared everything we knew with the Americans," says a French justice official.

They may have shared too much. At least in France, investigators now acknowledge that Al-Qaeda may have been involved in a massive feint to Europe while the real attack was always planned for the U.S. "People were convinced that Europe remained the theater for Islamic terrorists," says Jacquard. "It's anyone's guess whether that was a technique to get people looking in the wrong place. But that's what happened."

By the beginning of August, the President had made his request for a briefing on domestic threats. One of them was about to be uncovered. And therein lay the fourth mistake. On Aug. 16, Moussaoui was arrested in Minnesota for an immigration violation, just a day after the staff at the flight school where he was training told the FBI of their suspicions about him. The Minnesotans weren't alone; when American officials checked with their French counterparts, they discovered that Moussaoui had long been suspected of mixing in extremist circles. (The Zelig of modern terrorism, Moussaoui has been associated with al-Qaeda networks everywhere from London to Malaysia.) The FBI started urgently investigating Moussaoui's past; agents in Minneapolis sought a national-security warrant to search his computer files but were turned down by lawyers at FBI headquarters who said they didn't have sufficient evidence that he belonged to a terrorist group. Immediately after Moussaoui's arrest, agents twice visited the Airman Flight School in Norman, Okla., where he had studied before heading to Minnesota; two of the Sept. 11 hijackers had visited Norman in July 2000. The FBI did inform the CIA of Moussaoui's arrest, and the CIA ran checks on him while asking foreign intelligence services for information. But neither the FBI nor the CIA ever informed the counterterrorism group in the White House. "Do you think," says a White House antiterrorism official, "that if Dick Clarke had known that the FBI had in custody a foreigner who couldn't speak English, who was trying to fly a plane in midair, he wouldn't have done something?"

Since at least two of the four failures—those involving Moussaoui and the Phoenix memo—can be laid at the door of the FBI, the bureau is feeling the heat. "The FBI has a long pattern of not sharing information with others," says a former Clinton Administration official. "Now it's not even sharing the information with itself." Mueller, who knew about the Phoenix memo shortly after Sept. 11, plainly did not anticipate the criticism it would engender. Since it became public, officials have defensively pointed out that if the bureau had tried to track down all Muslim flight-school attendees, it would have been accused of racial profiling. White House officials defend Mueller; he is "tenacious about changing things," says one, who admits, "You can't change a culture that's 60 years in the making overnight." But on Capitol Hill the bureau is running out of friends. "I have no doubt that the FBI needs reform," said Senate Republican leader Trent Lott last week.

Yet when the blame gets assigned, as it will now that a joint congressional investigation into Sept. 11 is getting down to work, the FBI won't monopolize it. The ugly truth is that nine months after huge weaknesses in the national security system were revealed, they remain unaddressed. In Washington, says a senior Clinton Administration official, "information just moves through stovepipes," never getting pooled by different agencies until it is too late. The intelligence services were built to fight the cold war, not an enemy that flits from Afghan caves to apartments in London. The division between domestic and international security made sense when the former was concerned with what criminals did and the latter with foreign countries. But some criminals are now as powerful as countries, and some countries are run by criminals.

Nine months ago, the appointment of Tom Ridge as Homeland Security czar was billed as the shake-up Washington needed. So far, he has been more of a mild foot stamp than an earthquake. Instead of real reform, the Administration has resorted to its usual mode: attempting to control warring satrapies from the White House. The remarkable aspect of last week's events in Washington was the unintended revelation that Rice is the true manager of counterterrorism policy. In the past, the National Security Council got into trouble when it adopted an operational role rather than one of analysis (think Oliver North), and for Bush this identification of one of his closest advisers with the operational failures of counterterrorism policy could yet be politically troubling.

Among his supporters, however, the President still rides high. Bush's simple, passionate argument—that he would never have sat idly if he had known what was coming on Sept. 11—helped stiffen spines. Republicans pointed out that members of congressional intelligence committees get the same information the President receives in his PDB and yet had not made a fuss about the Aug. 6 briefing. That claim was disputed; Tom Daschle, the Democrat's leader in the Senate, insisted the Senate and the Administration did not have "identical information" about al-Qaeda threats.

In a sense, the spat over who got what version of which memo epitomizes Washington at its worst. The capital at its best would appreciate that the most important question isn't what Bush (or anyone else) knew before Sept. 11; it is what the Administration and Congress have and have not done to fix a broken system. But November and the midterm elections, you may have noticed, are only six months away. Washington is reverting to form.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Time magazine got into it very thoroughly—much more so than the committee that has been leaking. I was disappointed Sunday when I heard my distinguished colleague from Tennessee say: No, he would not take a polygraph test.

I am an old trial lawyer. You are not going to convict my client on a polygraph test. We used it in the Hoover Commission 50 years ago, and it is an indicator. I wanted to make sure the staff on the Intelligence Committee—as I found out, I had been doubledealed by the CIA and was told: I cannot give you that information, Senator, because your staff does not have the appropriate clearance.

Before you serve here as a Capitol policeman, you have to take a polygraph, and also before you serve in the FBI, CIA, and Secret Service—go down the list—but not the staff of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

So I learned that in a war you never ask your man to do something you do not do yourself first. So I went over to take a polygraph test. To the very first question, I started off my answer "in my humble opinion" and the needle went right off the chart. I flunked. It took 2 hours and they gave me a chance again, and after that 2-hour test, I passed it and came back and I still brought it up that as a member of the Intelligence Committee, they do not have the appropriate clearance. If they want to know where the leaks are, go to the committees.

Mr. President, the National Security Agency failed. They had all kinds of warnings about al-Qaida. They had Arabic friends over there. They got the word on September 10 in Arabic that "the match is about to begin," but they didn't translate the Arabic into English until September 12.

Now comes the National Security Council. It is interesting that in 1947 we had the same problem of coordination—instituting not only the CIA, but the 1947 National Security Council that the function of the Council shall be to advise the President with respect to the integration—that is joining—of domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to the national security, so as to enable the military services and the other Departments and Agencies of Government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving national security.

If you don't have a President right at the catbird seat pointing to them and saying you either talk and coordinate with each other or else you are out, it is not going to be done. You can pass all the bills you want in the U.S. Congress. You are just passing another entity for finger-pointing. They need correlation again and again.

Here is exactly what the President said in the National Security Presidential directive he made. I had a copy of it here. It is with respect to ordering the bush National Security Council. Incidentally, what I am saying I had said to him at the Cabinet table over 2 months ago. But on February 13—I ask unanimous consent that this National Security Presidential directive of February 13, 2001, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Subject: Organization of the National Security Council System

This document is the first in a series of National Security Presidential Directives. National Security Presidential Directives shall replace both Presidential Decision Directives and Presidential Review Directives as an instrument for communicating presidential decisions about the national security policies of the United States.

National security includes the defense of the United States of America, protection of our constitutional system of government, and the advancement of United States interest around the globe. National security also depends on America's opportunity to prosper in the world economy. The National Security Act of 1947, as amended, established the National Security Council to advise the President with respect to the integration of domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to national security. That remains its purpose. The NSC shall advise and assist me in integrating all aspects of national security policy as it affects the United States—domestic, foreign, military, intelligence, and economics (in conjunction with the National Economic Council (NEC)). The National Security Council system is a process to coordinate executive departments and agencies in the effective development and implementation of those national security policies.

The National Security Council (NSC) shall have as its regular attendees (both statutory and non-statutory) the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, and the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs. The Director of Central Intelligence and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as statutory advisors to the NSC, shall also attend NSC meetings. The Chief of Staff to the President and the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy are invited to attend any NSC meeting. The Counsel to the President shall be consulted regarding the agenda of NSC meetings, and shall attend any meetings when, in consultation with the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, he deems it appropriate. The Attorney General and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall be invited to attend meetings pertaining to their responsibilities. For the Attorney General, this includes both those matters within the Justice Department's jurisdiction and those matters implicating the Attorney General's responsibility under 28 U.S.C. 511 to give his advice and opinion on questions of law when required by the President. The heads of other executive departments and agencies, as well as other senior officials, shall be invited to attend meetings of the NSC when appropriate.

The NSC shall meet at my direction. When I am absent from a meeting of the NSC, at my direction the Vice President may preside. The Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs shall be responsible, at my direction and in consultation with the other regular attendees of the NSC, for determining the agenda, ensuring that necessary papers are prepared, and recording NSC actions and Presidential decisions. When international economic issues are on the agenda of the NSC, the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs and the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy shall perform these tasks in concert.

The NSC Principals Committee (NSC/PC) will continue to be the senior interagency forum for consideration of policy issues affecting national security, as it has since 1989. The NSC/PC shall have as its regular attendees the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Chief of Staff to the President, and the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs (who shall serve as chair). The Director of Central Intelligence and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall attend where issues pertaining to their responsibilities and expertise are to be discussed. The Attorney General and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall be invited to attend meetings pertaining to their responsibilities. For the Attorney General, this includes both those matters within the Justice Department's jurisdiction and those matters implicating the Attorney General's responsibility under 28 U.S.C. 511 to give his advice and opinion on questions of law when required by the President. The Counsel to the President shall be consulted regarding the agenda of NSC/PC meetings, and shall attend any meeting when, in consultation with the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, he deems it appropriate. When international economic issues are on the agenda of the NSC/PC, the Committee's regular attendees will include the Secretary of Commerce, the United States Trade Representative, the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy (who shall serve as chair for agenda items that principally pertain to international economics), and, when the issues pertain to her responsibilities, the Secretary of Agriculture. The Chief of Staff and National Security Adviser to the Vice President shall attend all meetings of the NSC/PC, as shall the Assistant to the President and Deputy National Security Advisor (who shall serve as Executive Secretary of the NSC/PC). Other heads of departments and agencies, along with additional senior officials, shall be invited where appropriate.

The NSC/PC shall meet at the call of the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs in consultation with the regular attendees of the NSC/PC. The Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs shall determine the agenda in consultation with the foregoing, and ensure that necessary papers are prepared. When international economic issues are on the agenda of the NSC/PC, the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs and the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy shall perform these tasks in concert.

The NSC Deputies Committee (NSC/DC) will also continue to serve as the senior sub-Cabinet interagency forum for consideration of policy issues affecting national security. The NSC/DC can prescribe and review the work of the NSC interagency groups discussed later in this directive. The NSC/DC shall also help ensure that issues being brought before the NSC/PC or the NSC have been properly analyzed and prepared for decision. The NSC/DC shall have as its regular members the Deputy Secretary of State or Under Secretary of the Treasury or Under Secretary of the Treasury for International Affairs, the Deputy Secretary of Defense or Under Secretary of Defense for Policy, the Deputy Attorney General, the Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence, the Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Deputy Chief of Staff to the President for Policy, the Chief of Staff and National Security Adviser to the Vice President, the Deputy Assistant to the President for International Economic Affairs, and the Assistant to the President and Deputy National Security Advisor (who shall serve as chair). When international economic issues are on the agenda, the NSC/DC's regular membership will include the Deputy Secretary of Commerce, A Deputy United States Trade Representative, and, when the issues pertain to his responsibilities, the Deputy Secretary of Agriculture, and the NSC/DC shall be chaired by the Deputy Assistant to the President for International Economic Affairs for agenda items that principally pertain to international economics. Other senior officials shall be invited where appropriate.

The NSC/DC shall meet at the call of its chair, in consultation with the other regular members of the NSC/DC. Any regular member of the NSC/DC may also request a meeting of the Committee for prompt crisis management. For all meetings the chair shall determine the agenda in consultation with the foregoing, and ensure that necessary papers are prepared.

The Vice President and I may attend any and all meetings of any entity established by or under this directive.

Management of the development and implementation of national security policies by multiple agencies of the United States Government shall usually be accomplished by the NSC Policy Coordination Committees (NSC/PCCs). The NSC/PCCs shall be the main day-to-day fora for interagency coordination of national security policy. They shall provide policy analysis for consideration by the more senior committees of the NSC system and ensure timely responses to decisions made by the President. Each NSC/PCC shall include representatives from the executive departments, offices, and agencies represented in the NSC/DC.

Six NSC/PCCs are hereby established for the following regions: Europe and Eurasia, Western Hemisphere, East Asia, South Asia, Near East and North Africa, and Africa. Each of the NSC/PCCs shall be chaired by an official of Under Secretary or Assistant Secretary rank to be designated by the Secretary of State.

Eleven NSC/PCCs are hereby also established for the following functional topics, each to be chaired by a person of Under Secretary or Assistant Secretary rank designated by the indicated authority:

Democracy, Human Rights, and International Operations (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs);

International Development and Humanitarian Assistance (by the Secretary of State);

Global Environment (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs and the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy in concert);

International Finance (by the Secretary of the Treasury);

Transnational Economic Issues (by the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy);

Counter-Terrorism and National Preparedness (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs);

Defense Strategy, Force Structure, and Planning (by the Secretary of Defense);

Arms Control (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs);

Proliferation, Counterproliferation, and Homeland Defense (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs);

Intelligence and Counterintelligence (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs); and Records Access and Information Security (by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs).

The Trade Policy Review Group (TPRG) will continue to function as an interagency coordinator of trade policy. Issues considered within the TPRG, as with the PCCs, will flow through the NSC and/or NEC process as appropriate.

Each NSC/PCC shall also have an Executive Secretary from the staff of the NSC, to be designated by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs. The Executive Secretary shall assist the Chairman in scheduling the meetings of the NSC/PCC, determining the agenda, recording the actions taken and tasks assigned, and ensuring timely responses to the central policymaking committees of the NSC system. The Chairman of each NSC/PCC, in consultation with the Executive Secretary, may invite representatives of other executive departments and agencies to attend meetings of the NSC/PCC where appropriate.

The Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, at my direction and in consultation with the Vice President and the Secretaries of State, Treasury, and Defense, may establish additional NSC/PCCs as appropriate.

The Chairman of each NSC/PCC, with the agreements of the Executive Secretary, may establish subordinate working groups to assist the PCC in the performance of its duties.

The existing system of Interagency Working Groups is abolished.

The oversight of ongoing operations assigned in PDD/NSC-56 to Executive Committees of the Deputies Committee will be performed by the appropriate regional NSC/PCCs, which may create subordinate working groups to provide coordination for ongoing operations.

The Counter-Terrorism Security Group, Critical Infrastructure Coordination Group, Weapons of Mass Destruction Preparedness, Consequences Management and Protection Group, and the interagency working group on Enduring Constitutional Government are reconstituted as various forms of NSC/PCC on Counter-Terrorism and National Preparedness.

The duties assigned in PDD/NSC-75 to the National Counterintelligence Policy Group will be performed in the NSC/PCC on Intelligence and Counterintelligence, meeting with appropriate attendees.

The duties assigned to the Security Policy Board and other entities established in PDD/NSC-29 will be transferred to various NSC/PCCs, depending on the particular security problem being addressed.

The duties assigned in PDD/NSC-41 to the Standing Committee on Nonproliferation will be transferred to the PCC on Proliferation, Counterproliferation, and Homeland Defense.

The duties assigned in PDD/NSC-36 to the Interagency Working Group for Intelligence Priorities will be transferred to the PCC on Intelligence and Counterintelligence.

The duties of the Human Rights Treaties Interagency Working Group established in E.O. 13107 are transferred to the PCC on Democracy, Human Rights, and International Operations.

The Nazi War Criminal Records Interagency Working Group established in E.O. 13110 shall be reconstituted, under the terms of that order and until its work ends in January 2002, as a Working Group of the NSC/PCC for Records Access and Information Security.

Except for those established by statute, other existing NSC interagency groups, ad hoc bodies, and executive committees are also abolished as of March 1, 2001, unless they are specifically reestablished as subordinate working groups within the new NSC system as of that date. Cabinet officers, the heads of other executive agencies, and the directors of offices within the Executive Office of the President shall advise the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs of those specific NSC interagency groups chaired by their respective departments or agencies that are either mandated by statute or are otherwise of sufficient importance and vitality as to warrant being reestablished. In each case the Cabinet officer, agency head, or office director should describe the scope of the activities proposed for or now carried out by the interagency group, the relevant statutory mandate if any, and the particular NSC/PCC that should coordinate this work. The Trade Promotion Coordinating Committee established in E.O. 12870 shall continue its work, however, in the manner specified in that order. As to those committees expressly established in the National Security Act, the NSC/PC and/or NSC/DC shall serve as those committees and perform the functions assigned to those committees by the Act.

To further clarify responsibilities and effective accountability within the NSC system, those positions relating to foreign policy that are designated as special presidential emissaries, special envoys for the President, senior advisors to the President and the Secretary of State, and special advisors to the President and the Secretary of State are also abolished as of March 1, 2001, unless they are specifically redesignated or reestablished by the Secretary of State as positions in that Department.

This Directive shall supersede all other existing presidential guidance on the organization of the National Security Council system. With regard to application of this document to economic matters, this document shall be interpreted in concert with any Executive Order governing the National Economic Council and with presidential decision documents signed hereafter that implement either this directive or that Executive Order. [signed: George W. Bush]

Mr. HOLLINGS. You will find in there that 11 functional coordinating committees within the council itself, chaired by the National Security Council. Among them are committees on counterterrorism and national preparedness, chaired by Condoleezza Rice, to Advisor to the President for National Security Affairs. You have another committee on counterproliferation and homeland defense, which the President of the United States thought was necessary in February of last year, chaired by Condoleezza Rice. There is another one on intelligence and counterintelligence, again chaired by Condoleezza Rice.

Later we see President's National Security Advisor on the TV saying: We did not get anything specific. In fairness to her, she is an expert in foreign policy. She used to instruct a course, I understand, at Stanford. She has never served in law enforcement or counterterrorism. But it is time to get real. This bill does not directly deal with the entities that failed. It is about running around, like my Navy friend used to say, "when in danger, when in doubt, run in circles scream and shout."

The administration propose this big bureaucracy. I have 110,000 of them already at DOT. I have been working on transportation security of the airlines, the rails, and the seaports. How are you going to get a department full of midlevel personnel in charge if you cannot get the Executive level, the Presidential level, engaged in active management. I told the President of the United States: Mr. President, I want you to get hourly reports on the homeland security intelligence as you receive those hourly political reports from Carl Rove. He knows what is going on politically in this country. I want him to know what is going on intelligence-wise with respect to homeland security, but we do not have that.

What we have is another finger-pointing agency. As Harry Truman said: The buck stops here. He is the one who brought in the 1947 initiative to reorganize for national security. He did not mind assuming that responsibility.

Mr. President, do you think if you were President that you would depend on the Department of Homeland Security for your intelligence analysis? No, no, that is not going to ever happen. One, that Department is only going to be fed what the President says to feed them. The FBI is not going to tell them everything. The CIA is not going to tell them everything. It is a culture. We have to break down that culture, but the only place we know they are not afraid to tell is the National Security Council of the President of the United States.

The Secretary of the Homeland Defense Department would not even know what to ask for. They do not have any kind of intelligence collection. They do not have the authority or resources to do that. They would create another analysis department, but it will not function properly unless it is fused. There has to be a fusion, an integration, as they said in 1947, of domestic and foreign intelligence so they know where to act. We have read in the newspapers where they are getting their money for terrorism, outfitting Canada and so on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

My time is limited, so I will close with the idea that, we can pass this bill ipso facto, word for word—either bill—this afternoon, and 4 or 5 years from now after they have had a chance to organize, we can have another 9–11. We are not going to prevent it with this particular measure.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is all right, Mr. President. I will yield the time back and come back in on the debate. This is only a motion to proceed. I work with them. I can tell you the resistance of the FBI talking to the CIA—that is not in this bill—but we have to have a President get them together and make sure information is fused. There is a resistance. We have had meetings on port security. I cannot get the FBI to attend those meetings. I am going to get on Bob Mueller about that because I have his appropriation, but they do not want to get together. They are looking for crime. They are not looking for prevention. They want to catch somebody. When crimes are committed they are called into action. While we hope crimes are never committed, the FBI serves the nation by responding when crimes are committed. We must work to prevent terrorist attacks. That is the new culture, the new role to be taken on.

The President has to play the game of President, be the chief executive. Mr. President, I say to Senator BYRD, in his mind, does he think he would depend on the Department of Domestic Security for making a decision? He is not going to depend on that Department or any other, except for the National Security Council.

There is no substitute for the CIA being on the Council or for the FBI being on the Council, the Attorney General, or the Secretary of Homeland Security. Put him on the National Security Council. Let's begin to emphasize the domestic side of foreign policy and international threats.

That is what has to be done, and it has to be done at the White House. You cannot run all over the country fundraising; you have to go to work. That is one fault with this particular President. I cannot put him to work. I see him out with flags, military people, policemen, firemen, and others. Carl Rove has him. I would like to get hold of him, and we could get this Government going. He has to go to work and bring them in and say: I want to make sure I know what I am doing. And this Department does not help him know what he is doing.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from New York wish?

Mrs. CLINTON. Ten minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I rise to join Senator BYRD in speaking about our homeland security needs. Our colleague from South Carolina always teaches me something whenever I have the pleasure and privilege of hearing him speak in this Chamber.

New Yorkers particularly owe Senator BYRD a great debt of gratitude because he and his very worthy staff have done a tremendous amount of work to help New York recover and rebuild from the tragedy of September 11.

As we appear today in this Chamber, I cannot help but remark that Senator BYRD has been focused on homeland security from the moment I first spoke with him on September 12 around 7 a.m. after we knew the full extent of the damage, and I was going up to see what had happened in New York for myself. He has been extremely understanding and also very knowledgeable about what it was going to take to make us more secure.

I also thank Senator LIEBERMAN for his tremendous efforts in trying to craft legislation that will make us safer. We are not just doing this for a political exercise or just to reorganize for the sake of reorganizing, but we know there are serious issues to be addressed, some of which Senator HOLLINGS spoke about.

I do support the idea of a Homeland Security Department, but I come today to recognize the seriousness of the issues that should be addressed while we are trying to determine what it is we need to do to make our Government more prepared.

There are a number of issues, and my colleagues have raised quite a few of them, but I want to focus on one particular aspect of our homeland security, and that is the resources that our frontline firefighters, police officers, and emergency responders need to be the soldiers to defend our homeland security. Just as we support our men and women in uniform who are doing a very important job extremely well, from Afghanistan to the Middle East to the Far East, we have to do the same for our local homeland defenders.

I have been disappointed in the disconnect between rhetoric and resources from the administration. We certainly have had many heartfelt and moving moments where words have captured our feelings.

When it comes to providing the resources that our police, our firefighters, and our emergency responders need, I think the administration has fallen short. That was certainly clear over the August recess when the President chose not to sign the emergency designation for the $5.1 billion supplemental appropriations bill, which included $2.5 billion for improving our homeland security.

That number did not come out of thin air. It was the result of hearings, testimony, and evidence presented by people on the front lines. A number of people from New York who were in our police department and our fire department, who had been there on September 11, who understood what we needed to be well prepared, came down to set forth a very clear agenda that they hoped the Federal Government would help them meet.

The supplemental appropriations bill, for example, would have given our first responders $100 million so that police and firefighters would have communications systems that could talk to each other. We found out, tragically, on September 11 that we did not have that, and New York is not alone in not having what is called interoperability between the police and firefighter radio systems.

There would have been $150 million in additional FIRE Act grant funding to help fire departments improve their emergency preparedness, and there would have been $90 million to track the long-term health care of those who responded at Ground Zero, not just so we fulfill our obligation to take care of these brave men and women but also so we can be better prepared to take care of all of our first responders.

I am not alone in thinking the President's refusal to sign the emergency designation was a terrible mistake. The International Association of Firefighters has voiced its concern in very clear, unmistakable language. I know they are particularly passionate about this issue because they lost so many of their colleagues.

In his August 20 letter to President Bush, the International Association of Firefighters general president, Harold Schaitberger, had this to say:

I would be dishonest if I did not convey our anger, concern and growing doubt about your commitment to us. . . . No one, not even the President, has the right to pontificate about his or her commitment and respect for firefighters while ignoring our legitimate needs.

With all due respect, support entails more than kind words.

The President said he was exercising fiscal discipline by not making the emergency designation and said that this was, in his view, wasteful congressional spending; that $5 billion was not an emergency even if it went to the kind of emergency needs and services that we know we are lacking.

I have to respectfully disagree. I think we do face an emergency. We are rushing through this legislation because clearly we think we face an emergency. But the real emergency is not in Washington to reorganize a huge Government department. The real emergency is in the police stations and the firehouses and the emergency rooms of America. That is why I am concerned that when the Congress goes through the kind of process it did to arrive at a need for $5.1 billion and it is totally disregarded, then why on Earth would we want to give up congressional oversight and authority in setting the agenda to protect our country?

I believe it is imperative we do everything we can in setting up this Department to get the money to where it needs to go. We have to get the dollars where the responsibility rests.

When a disaster occurs, whether it is man-made or accidental, we do not call the White House. We do not even call the Senate or the Congress or the Governor's office. In most instances, we call 911.

It is clear the kind of support we need for direct Federal homeland security funding needs to be a part of any homeland security defense program.

We have a heavy responsibility in Washington, not just to talk the talk but to walk the walk with our first responders. We have to give them the equipment and the resources and the training they need. According to the U.S. Conference of Mayors, since September 11 cities have invested almost $3 billion in added security costs for equipment, overtime, and training. As of this date, with the exceptions of New York and Washington, DC, which suffered so grievously on September 11, not one city has received a single dime to cover these additional costs.

Some bioterrorism funding—about $1.1 billion—has been dispersed to the States, and that helps, but that does not answer the need that our firefighters, police officers, and emergency responders have.

I think it is clear, if we are going to be debating this Department, let us talk about the real needs that are out there. We have to be sure we follow the clear example that has been set by communities in trying to shift funds to meet their emergency needs. We have to help them shoulder these additional burdens. Clearly, the Federal, State, and local governments are at partnership in preparing, in being responsible, and then finally in responding. But if they do not have the resources, they cannot do the job.

So as we debate this Department, let us join with the people on our front lines who understand what they really need—groups such as the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National League of Cities, and the National Association of Counties. Let us support direct Federal funding to local communities. Let us do it in the form of a community development block grant. Let us follow the money where it needs to go.

From my perspective, it is imperative we debate resources, not just reorganization. It would be a cruel deception to pass something called Homeland Security Department reorganization, which we all know is going to take years to untangle to try to get focused and to be effective, and not provide the dollars that our frontline defenders need.

I ask unanimous consent for 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. CLINTON. This is compounded because the administration's budget calls for eliminating money that would go to our police, firefighters, and local law enforcement; eliminating more than $500 million from the COPS program; eliminating entirely Federal funding for hiring new so-called COPS officers; eliminating and cutting other essential programs such as the local law enforcement block grant. This makes no sense to me.

It is fine to have this abstract, theoretical, philosophical, even constitutional debate, as important as it is—and I believe with all my heart it is a critical debate—but let us not kid ourselves: If we do not get resources where it counts, we are not going to be better prepared, we are not going to be better defended. I hope as we debate homeland defense, we also recognize the obligation we owe to those men and women who would answer the call today when it is sent out.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank Mrs. CLINTON, the distinguished Senator from New York, for her very appropriate, meaningful, and forceful remarks in connection with this matter and in connection with other matters she has addressed. And I thank Senator HOLLINGS, the chairman of the committee which has jurisdiction over transportation, the chairman of the appropriations subcommittee which has jurisdiction over the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments and other agencies; and thanks to Senator REED for his excellent presentation.

This time is going on my time, which is all right. I am prepared to yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Washington, who sits on the Appropriations Committee and who presides over the Transportation Subcommittee of that committee with a high degree of dignity and poise, and someone who always brings to the committee's attention and to the Senate's attention the length and breadth of her great knowledge that she acquires through the holding of hearings, through the study she gives to the budget requests that come before the committee. I yield 15 minutes to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia for his leadership on this issue and for yielding me the time today.

On June 6, President Bush addressed the American public, informing the public he had changed his mind. After months of rejecting just such a proposal, he now saw the benefit of organizing a new Department of Homeland Security. His aides had handed him a plan. To his eyes, it was a good plan and one that should be implemented.

However, something else happened that week as well that happens all too frequently in America. The Coast Guard, one of the agencies that would be merged into the President's new Department of Homeland Security, was performing search and rescue operations across the Nation.

In my home State of Washington, the Coast Guard was dispatching helicopters and motorboats throughout Willapa Bay to search for three missing Fort Lewis soldiers. On the evening of June 1, their 20-foot pleasure craft washed ashore in Bay Center, WA. Unfortunately, those soldier's bodies were recovered the next morning.

As I look today at the President's request, I am very mindful of the impact it could have on the Coast Guard's ability to carry out other missions like search and rescue.

We need to be responsive to the President's request. We need to give this and future administrations the tools they need to better secure America. However, we cannot sacrifice the critical safety work of the Coast Guard for the incomplete plan the President's aides drew up in the basement of the White House.

I rise today because I am deeply concerned that in our rush to do something about homeland security, we may well overlook the consequences it will have on the safety and security of all Americans. Frankly, given what I have seen so far, I have very real reasons for concern. Of course, I believe, like all my colleagues, that we need to do everything we can to make sure our Government and our military can meet the challenges since September 11. We have to focus considerable energy and resources on addressing those challenges.

Those who want to harm us will look for new ways to exploit our weaknesses. We have to do better. The world has changed. We must adapt. But we must balance the needs of our country.

In my role as chairman of the Appropriations Transportation Subcommittee, I have worked very hard to provide the resources to meet our needs at our borders, at our seaports, airports, and throughout our Nation's transportation infrastructure. Often, that has meant pushing this administration to support the necessary funding, sometimes without success.

We are moving forward, and we are making America more secure. The Senate has followed a deliberate process, and the leadership of Senator BYRD has been critical to this endeavor. He has made sure that we move forward responsibly to meet the new challenges facing our Nation. But let's face it, it takes a while to get even the simple things right. I have been working with the Transportation Security Administration for months on airline security, and even the smallest things have taken a while to work out.

Look at what we face at our northern border. It took many months and we had to put a lot of pressure on this administration just to get the National Guard deployed at the northern border to fill the gaping holes in our border security left by years of negligence. It then took many more weeks to get our guardsmen armed, secure. Securing our border is essential, but so is ensuring the efficient flow of people, goods, and services across our border with our friends in Canada. Canada is our Nation's largest trading partner. Many millions of people in both countries depend on that trade for their livelihoods. If we do the wrong thing, the loss of jobs in our border communities will be devastating.

How will the Department of Homeland Security, envisioned by the President, balance the complexity of those competing needs of the American people? We do not know. We are supposed to trust this administration.

Now the administration wants to rush through a homeland security bill which was drawn up by a handful of White House aides. It is the largest Government reorganization since 1947. Look at what has happened in the House since the President submitted his proposal. The standing committees looked at the proposal and saw major problems. The House Transportation and Infrastructure Subcommittee unanimously voted to keep the Coast Guard out of that new Department. Based on their expertise and their research, the standing committee saw the clear need to maintain the Coast Guard outside of the new Department.

What happened? The select committee ignored that recommendation and put a rubber stamp on the President's original proposal. In fact, several times the standing committees made constructive improvements to bills, only to see their recommendations rejected by the select committee.

The administration wants to rush this proposal through Congress. Anyone who raises a legitimate question is immediately derided as "trying to reserve turf."

This is not about turf. It is about safety. It is about young Coast Guardsmen who climbed aboard foreign vessels in the open seas, not knowing what they may find. It is about TSA security agents who are trying to make sure that passengers attempting to board our planes do not pose a security threat. I am proud to work to try to provide them with some job security just as they work hard to protect our Nation's security.

These are real questions that need to be answered. This afternoon, I raise some of those questions because there is a lot at stake for the people I represent and for every American. I want to make sure we do this right. So far, I have not gotten the answers I need.

I have two major concerns. First, we have not yet figured out how to fulfill our traditional missions and the new security missions at the same time. If we combined all these various agencies into one massive Department with a primary mission of homeland security, how are we going to meet the traditional needs across the board?

Let's look at the Coast Guard, just one agency. Since September 11, the Coast Guard has shifted resources away from traditional missions to homeland events. That is an appropriate response, but it comes at a cost. Unfortunately, it means the Coast Guard is spending less time interdicting drugs and illegal migrants, enforcing fishery and marine safety laws, and protecting our marine environment.

But the traditional missions have not disappeared. We still need the Coast Guard to keep drugs and the illegal migrants off our shores. We need them to protect our environment. And we need them to protect the lives of our fishermen and the integrity of our fishing grounds. Frankly, even without the new security needs, we have a long way to go to meet even those basic missions.

I am concerned we are rushing into a new organization that could compromise our ability to meet all the challenges we are facing. What will be the commitment from the Department of Homeland Security to protecting our marine environment or enforcing our fisheries laws or conducting search and rescue operations? If the administration continues to play budget games and underfund the Department, as it has done so far with the TSA, will the scarce dollars go only to security and not to traditional missions?

Right now, we cannot even get the basic facts. I would like to know how much of the current Coast Guard budget is going toward homeland security. On July 9, the Coast Guard Commandant said 40 percent of the Coast Guard's operating budget goes to the missions of the new Department. A few weeks later, on July 30, the Commandant said almost 50 percent of the Coast Guard's budget went to homeland security. That is a difference of at least $350 million. That number matters because the boats and resources used for homeland defense are often the very same ones needed for search and rescue and other missions.

I am not raising this to criticize Admiral Collins. He is doing an excellent job. I work closely with him. But it shows how difficult it is to get even the most basic questions answered as we look at this new Department. The answers matter because the vast majority of Americans live in coastal States or along the Great Lakes or inland waterways, and every American is impacted when the Coast Guard slows down its work stopping illegal drugs. To include the Coast Guard in the new Department will impact the lives of millions of people. I think we need to explore these questions closely. Simply put, we have not done a good job meeting our traditional missions and security missions at the same time. I would like to know how one massive Department, focused primarily on security, will help us meet the needs out there.

Second, I am very concerned about accountability and authority over everything from the staff of the new Department to its budget. The administration has asked for unprecedented power and control over this proposed Department. Some of the demands for power over workers really trouble me. The President wants changes in the personnel rules so he can have flexibility. Is the President suggesting that today's unionized border agents are not doing an adequate job or that today's unionized Customs officials are not responding to new mission requirements in a timely manner? If that is what he is suggesting, then he is wrong.

I have been on the border. I have met with the Border Patrol and Customs agents. These professionals are our sons and daughters, they are our neighbors, they are our friends, they are our husbands, and they are our wives. They serve the American people selflessly, often jeopardizing their own health and safety. I do not think those who serve in the Department of Homeland Security should be second-class citizens, given a lower level of rights and respect.

In addition to dramatic new control over workers, the administration wants the power to move the money around without congressional input. Let me tell you, given what I have seen so far, this is pretty scary news for families in Washington State. Right now, as a United States Senator, I can fight to make sure the needs in my State are being met. As elected Members of Congress, we know the needs in our communities and we are accountable to our voters. But the administration now wants accountants in the Office of Management and Budget to decide what is important to the people of my home State of Washington. If that happens, my constituents will lose out at a cost to their safety and security.

Let's just look at what happened with the supplemental appropriations bill. Under the leadership of Chairman BYRD, the Appropriations Committee held unprecedented and comprehensive hearings on how to best meet our obligations to the American people. We spent countless hours hearing from national and local experts. We passed the funding to meet the needs before us. Congress passed that funding, but then the President eliminated more than $5 billion of it. With a wave of his hand, over the August break, the President eliminated funding that we here in Congress considered critical, after many hours of hearings, to protecting the American public.

He eliminated $11 million from Coast Guard operations. The President eliminated, with a wave of his hand, $262 million for critical Coast Guard procurement, including funding for coastal patrol boats for our security. The President eliminated $150 million for our Nation's airports, as they are working so hard to meet the December deadline for installing explosive detection devices. And the President eliminated $480 million from its already shortchanged Transportation and Security Administration.

The Office of Management and Budget has not been a good advocate for the people of my home State of Washington. Given that record, I am very reluctant to give OMB dramatic new power over the safety and security of my constituents. The OMB originally blocked the Coast Guard's desperately needed improvements to the marine 911 system. When they brought it to their attention, the OMB changed its policy, but under the President's plan there is no way for us in Congress to address the arbitrary decision made by the OMB. Granting the President dramatic new authority is not just a bureaucratic exercise. It has real consequences for the people I represent. I take that responsibility very seriously.

If we are not going to figure out how all the functions are going to be performed and we can't tie money to functions, this reorganization may consign many functions to death, as we saw when the President eliminated $5.1 billion in homeland security funding.

In closing, we need to better define the missions of the various agencies, and we need to make sure they continue to fulfill their traditional missions. It is essential for our economic security and our physical safety. The House bill does not strike a balance, and we have to do better. We need to really understand the consequences of this proposal and ensure that it will actually increase our homeland security and not jeopardize our citizens in other ways.

I believe this has not been thought out enough and we should certainly not race to put a rubberstamp on such an incomplete proposal. I think every Senator feels pressure to do something, anything, about homeland security. But it is much more important to do the right thing.

I look forward to having a good debate about the new Department of Homeland Security. There are a lot of serious questions, and I look forward to hearing some serious answers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the very distinguished Senator who is a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, as I have already indicated, for her exceedingly incisive remarks which reflect the high dedication that this Senator always brings to her work. I personally appreciate it, as the chairman of the committee. She is a fine member of that committee, and she has lived up to those—and far better—encomiums than I have been able to deliver today.

How much time does the distinguished senior Senator from New York wish to have?

Mr. SCHUMER. Will 15 minutes be all right?

Mr. BYRD. Let's try 15 minutes and hope that will do the job.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator. Before my friend from Washington State leaves the floor, I want to thank her for her leadership on this issue. I particularly thank our distinguished leader, the senior Senator from West Virginia, for his leadership on this issue.

The Senate, at certain times, has an important role—at all times it has important roles, but there is an important role that it has now, and that is for the Senate to be, of course, what one of the Founding Fathers called the cooling saucer. If there was ever a time where there was a need for that cooling saucer that the Senate should be and has been through its history in its finest moments, it is now. That is because we face a whole new challenge in these United States, a challenge that says every one of our citizens is on the front line.

This new war on terrorism means that small groups of bad people can do real damage in our homeland. Until 9/11, this was something that was unknown to us. There were battlefronts and there was the homefront, but now the homefront is the battlefront, and the battlefront is the homefront and that demands dramatic and significant changes in our Government.

If the senior Senator from West Virginia were not here, we probably would have just rolled over and we would not have had the kind of debate we are having.

He knows his history, whether it be of the Roman Senate or of the U.S. Senate or all the various Senates in between. I was going to ask him—because my family and I just visited Venice—about the Venetian Senate, to see how that compared. I didn't even know Venice had a Senate until I visited, but we will get that history lesson at another time. We have more pressing issues now.

The Senator from West Virginia is bringing the Senate to its best. He is not being obstructionist. He is not saying no. He is simply saying not to rush on such a major piece of legislation that is going to involve the most dramatic reorganization of the Government in history, on a major piece of legislation that is called on to defend us in brand-new ways.

We no longer just have the battlefront, but we have the homefront. My citizens from New York believe they are on the battlefront. They walk into a subway car and they worry what might happen. A plane flies overhead and they worry what might happen. They look at a reservoir or powerplant and they worry what might happen. This is not a time to rush things through because the very safety of our citizens is at stake.

When government was founded, when men and women got off their knees and founded government, it had two purposes: To protect from foreign invasion and keep the domestic tranquility. For the first time, those two issues were combined.

A lengthy and worthy debate of the Senate is what is called for and the senior Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, whom we all admire so, has summoned the best in us and asked us to do that. I am proud to get up here and ask for that.

I would also like to praise my good friend from Connecticut. He has put together an excellent piece of legislation that talks about the Senate's prerogatives, not just today but as we go forward. It says a single man, albeit elected, the only man elected by all the people—the only person elected by all the people, so far, the President of the United States—should have some power. But this is not what the Founding Fathers intended. He should not be allowed to take one from one agency and put it in another. He should not be allowed to move employees from one place to another without the approval of the Congress.

I regret to say that the House moved all too quickly. I am glad Senator LIEBERMAN and his committee have had a chance to improve on the House legislation, and to improve on it in a very significant way in major areas that the Senator from Connecticut has outlined.

What I am saying today is that we have to go beyond that as well and address some of the substantive areas of security—not simply how we reorder the Government and rearrange it, and not simply the balance of power between the President, the Senate, and the House, which is very important and worthy of debate—Senator LIEBERMAN has put his oar in the water on that one and given it a powerful stroke, if we pass his proposal—but also to debate some of the substance of homeland security. I fear that if we simply rearrange the agencies and run away from spending the extra dollars we have to spend to make our homeland more secure, we will have not done the full job. That is why I feel so strongly about having a continued debate.

Let me mention a few areas where I have had some expertise in that substantive area. No matter what you do about rearranging and putting a department here and a department there, we will still not be secure unless we delve into those departments.

One which I am going to touch on briefly is a computer system throughout the Justice Department. Recognizing that we are not reorganizing the FBI or the CIA, let me focus on the areas where we are, such as the INS. Our computer systems are totally backward. We had a hearing in my Judiciary subcommittee which has oversight over the FBI where we showed that the computer systems of the FBI cannot search for two words. They can search for the word “flight” and for the word “school,” but they cannot search for the words “flight school.” Something is dramatically the matter. The INS computers—we are moving the INS around—are just as bad, and maybe worse. Until we update those computers, all sorts of bad people with bad intentions will be able to get into this country even though another part of the Government knows they are bad. We should be addressing that problem when we are doing a homeland security bill.

Then let me talk about the issue that is of greatest concern to me, which is, frankly, the issue that seems to be of great concern to our President, and rightfully so. To me, the worst danger I can conceive of that could befall us in this war on terrorism is that a terrorist group could smuggle a nuclear weapon, or a few, into this country and detonate them. As horrible as 9/11 was, as aching as my city and State are, it would pale before the damage of a nuclear explosion in downtown New York, or downtown Chicago, or downtown Houston, or downtown Los Angeles, San Francisco, Boston, Kansas City, or anywhere else.

Yet right now, if, God forbid, a terrorist group should get hold of such a nuclear weapon either by purchasing it from the few powers that have them that we are worried about—Pakistan, Russia, and, down the road, Iraq, if they develop enough U-238—that weapon could be smuggled into this country, say, on one of the large containers that are unloaded from our ships or brought through the borders—Canadian and Mexican—on trucks, with virtually no detection. What a surprising thought. It is no longer that a missile would deliver such a bomb or that a plane would deliver such a bomb but, rather, that it would come across our border at ground or water level. That is a frightening thought.

The good news is we can do something about it. The good news, when you talk to the scientists at Brookhaven National Lab out on Long Island or Argonne Lab in the suburbs of Chicago, is they say we could develop a device that could at a distance of 40 or 50 feet detect nuclear weapons, if they, God forbid, should be smuggled into this country, because nuclear radioactivity involves gamma rays which can pierce all but lead. To deal with surrounding the bomb in lead, you can just use an x-ray detection device. The x ray would detect the lead. The problem is, they have the technology to do this, but it is only done in lab conditions in cyclotrons and atom smashers.

We need it to go through every container that comes into America. Right now, the only way you can detect radiation is through a Geiger counter. Unfortunately, a Geiger counter has to be placed maybe 3 feet from the radioactive source. You can't go into every one of these big containers with a Geiger counter and push it up against every crate—There are probably 30, 40, or 50 crates in each container; there are hundreds of containers on these ships and thousands that come across by truck—without bringing commerce to a standstill.

The alternative is to develop a device that would do this 40 or 50 feet away, and then install it on every crane that either loads or unloads a container bound for the United States, or that is here in the United States, and put it on every toll booth for a truck that goes over the Canadian border or Mexican border. The cost of developing this device is probably about $500 million, and then probably another $1 billion to install it.

The good senior Senator from Virginia, Mr. WARNER—obviously not of my party—and I have legislation that would begin to do this, that would start the research.

For the love of me, why can't we get support for this? Why isn't the White House supporting this? We are very worried about Iraq producing nuclear weapons. We should be. But why aren't we making our homeland secure from the delivery of those nuclear weapons? Maybe it won't be Iraq. Maybe it will be Iran. Maybe it will be North Korea. Maybe it will be someone else we can't even think about.

I think we should be able to debate that proposal on the floor of this Senate—not a year from now but now. I feel the urgency of this. The safety of our citizens is at stake. If it takes an extra day or two, so be it. That is the role of the Senate.

Why doesn't the White House get behind this kind of proposal? For some reason, they won't. I think it is because they don't want to spend the money, as amplified by the recent almost virtual pocket veto of the $5 billion that was part of the appropriations bill. But I will bet if you ask each American if they would spend $1 billion to prevent nuclear weapons from being smuggled into our country and the worst kind of catastrophe imaginable to befall us, they would all say yes. If asked, my 99 colleagues would say yes.

That is the kind of thing we are trying to do here—not be obstructionists. The Senator from West Virginia, as the leader of our band here, has made it clear he doesn't want to be an obstructionist. The Senator from Connecticut has made it clear he believes we have to do things to improve the legislation.

I ask that we continue to debate this legislation. I understand we have time constraints. Those are real. I understand that. I understand we cannot debate this bill for 3 or 4 months right now. But we don't have to have an artificial deadline that it must be finished by next week. If we think that deadline is needed, let us stay in session, go in early, and stay in late until the major amendments are dealt with. I am confident my colleagues from Connecticut and Tennessee will deal with those amendments in a fair way. They are not trying to say it is their way or no way. In fact, that is why we have bills, and that is why we have them debated. But the reorganization of Government agencies is an important issue. I agree with it. I am supportive of it. But I do not think it is the only issue facing homeland security.

And for our President—and I respect him and repeat that every New Yorker owes him a debt of gratitude for being so helpful in the $21 billion this Senate so generously voted for and the House voted for—but when he says the Senate is getting in the way, that the Senate better pass his bill his way, not the way I would want or the Senator from Connecticut would want or, in fact, the Senator from Tennessee would want, he is not being fair, not just to the Senate but to the American people because we do have a crisis. It is a slow crisis; it is an insidious crisis.

Unfortunately, for politicians, the incentives are backward; in other words, we all love to allocate money, build a school, and get up there and say: Here is a school. But what is our goal with homeland security? What do we want to happen? Nothing. We are very successful if nothing happens. And that provides negative incentives or perverse incentives for the political process. That is the real worry.

If we were to put $3 billion into the northern border, if we were to put $1 billion into the INS computer system, if we were to spend $1 billion to—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 30 additional seconds to finish my thought.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 1 additional minute.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator. If we were to spend another $1 billion on nuclear weapons, I think it would be worth it. I think the American people would be for us. I may be wrong, but at least I would like the chance to debate and vote on issues I consider to be urgent, pressing needs for my constituency in my State that I love so, and for the people of the United States, for the country I love so.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Senator from New York for a very thoughtful statement.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from California, Mrs. BOXER, be recognized at 5 p.m. for a period of 10 minutes, out of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the President wants the Congress to grant the administration the authority to write its own civil service system, regardless of what has been written in current law, that would apply only to Federal workers within a new Department of Homeland Security.

As I have expressed before on this floor, I am concerned that these changes mask the administration's larger hidden agenda, an agenda that would have the Federal Government function more like a big corporation. We all certainly ought to be concerned about that idea, given our recent experience with the inner workings of big corporations.

I come, Mr. President, from the coalfields of southern West Virginia, not from a corporate boardroom. So I approach this with a different perspective than the administration, quite obviously. Before I would ever vote to approve a homeland security measure, I would want to know more about the working conditions of its prospective employees. Will the employees who currently enjoy collective bargaining rights continue to enjoy those same rights at the new Department? Will these employees have complete whistleblower protections?

Before I vote to approve a homeland security measure, I want to know about the pay system. How will the payroll systems and personnel systems be merged into the new Department? How would the special pay rates, already in existence at the separate agencies, coordinate or be replaced by a pay system if one were to be implemented? What will be the hiring procedures? What will be the firing procedures in this vast new order?

Presidential spokesman Ari Fleischer says these new procedures are needed to enable managers to fire workers who drink on the job. Would they also be able to fire workers because they join a union, because they vote Democratic, because they have red hair or no hair or lots of hair or white hair?

The administration argues that the Secretary for Homeland Security will require significant flexibility in the hiring and firing process because, for example, according to the administration, existing due process and appeal rights make it impossible to fire or demote Federal employees who are poor performers.

But this and other claims are simply not true. A report by the nonpartisan Partnership for Public Service recently stated:

[W]hat is missing from the current debate . . . is the institutional experience government has accumulated with Title 5 modifications that have already successfully allowed government agencies to emulate high-performing workplaces—without compromising merit principles, including protections against politicized personnel decisions.

Mr. President, the fact is, the administration currently enjoys broad flexibilities when it comes to the Federal workforce. A report by the Congressional Research Service points out:

Executive branch departments and agencies currently have considerable flexibility to perform personnel functions in such areas as recruiting, hiring, compensation, promotion, training, and retention. The extent to which the departments and agencies are using the flexibilities is unknown.

"Unknown."

One of the most important protections granted by the civil service system, that could be eliminated under the President's proposal, is for whistleblowers. Remember Franklin's whistle? Remember the story about Benjamin Franklin's whistle, that he paid too much for his whistle? I am talking about whistleblowers, just now.

The day the President made the announcement of his newfound support for a Department of Homeland Security was the very day that an FBI whistleblower, Coleen Rowley, was to testify before Congress on the embarrassing failures of that agency leading up to the September 11 tragedy. It is clear the administration hoped to limit coverage of that hearing by offering its secret plan that was hatched in the bowels of the White House to establish a new Department of Homeland Security, on the same day—a plan, I might add, that would not provide its employees the same level of protection with regard to whistleblowers as that FBI agent enjoyed that day.

Whistleblower protections are essential to protect Federal employees against managerial reprisals for lawfully disclosing information they believe demonstrates a violation of law or mismanagement of authority.

The President seemed to agree with this principle when he issued an executive order on January 20, 2001, that required all Federal workers to obey their duty and report fraud, waste, and abuse.

Excessive secrecy enforced by repression can threaten national security by covering up Government breakdowns that sustain unnecessary vulnerability to terrorism. An example from the post-September 11 period provided by the American Federation of Government employees is illuminating. In testimony before the House Select Committee on Homeland Security, American Federation for Government Employees President, Bobby L. Harnage, Sr., provided the following story, and I quote from his testimony:

In the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks, two union officers of the National Border Patrol Council—border agents Mark Hall and Mark Lindenmann—went on the NBC Today Show and testified before Congress to speak out against security on the United States northern border. They said that despite all the talk, no new agents had been placed on the northern border and that agents were not making criminal background checks on people caught entering the United States illegally. These statements prompted the Immigration and Naturalization Service supervisors to propose to summarily fire the agents, stating in internal e-mails that "the President of the local union deemed it necessary to independently question our readiness in a public forum," that "managers must take a stance which bears no tolerance of dissent," and that managers must "view resistance from rank and file as insubordination."

Well, this is what employees are often up against when they speak out against the company line, even when the company line involves the security of the United States.

Without knowledge that the union would represent them and that an impartial whistleblower hearing process was in place to review subsequent INS actions against them, we can be sure that they never would have said a word and Congress would never have heard the truth of what was really happening on the northern border of the United States.

Before the August recess, Congress overwhelmingly approved state-of-the-art corporate whistleblower protection as an encouragement for private sector workers to defend America's financial markets. Our homeland security requires similar rights for Government workers to make disclosures in defending American families against terrorism. Without full whistleblower protections in place, Congress would have had a difficult time in the past learning of the problems associated with governmental reorganizations, and there have been some serious problems in our recent history.

As a rule of thumb, it is important to remember that Federal Government reorganizations have been difficult to accomplish. As James M. Lindsay, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institute, recently said:

History suggests we never get reorganizations right the first time, and this is an especially ambitious proposal. A lot of follow-through will be needed to make it work.

Recent experience in providing the executive branch with flexibility in establishing a new Government agency holds great lessons for what we are being asked to do today. This flexibility failed in an identical experiment at the Federal Aviation Administration in which Congress gave the flexibility to replace merit system and collective bargaining procedures with so-called superior management alternatives. The result was chaos. Personnel disputes rose sharply, morale plummeted, and the mishmash of employee organizations sprang up to replace coherent labor-management dialog in disputes from all directions.

In the year 2000, Congress learned the obvious lesson and restored the merit system's due process procedures and remedies. What about the new Transportation Security Agency that was created last year? Congress reluctantly agreed to the administration's request for exceptions to the civil service system for employees at the new agency because they wanted to streamline personnel procedures to allow faster hiring and provide for flexibility and shifting people among jobs as the new agency was established. That sounds familiar, doesn't it?

The results have been mixed at best. Recall that just a few short weeks ago the administration fired its hand-picked director of the new Transportation Safety Administration, John W. McGaw, only 6 months after the agency was established. Creating an effective and efficient Department of Homeland Security and retaining the basic rights of Federal workers are not mutually exclusive.

I am not here to say our civil service system is perfect, but I do say that using the security of the United States and the rights of Federal workers as a bargaining chip to further a political agenda is simply unacceptable. What an irony that this administration is using an attack by terrorists who have no respect for the rule of law or the rights of workers as a justification for us not to respect our own laws or the rights of workers.

So I am grateful for this opportunity today to speak on this issue. I am grateful for the opportunity for the Senate to address the issue. I ask the distinguished Senator from Wyoming if he wishes to speak.

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. BYRD. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to comment for a few minutes on the subject that is before the Senate. I am not a member of the committee. I have not spent as much time on it as have others. But I think there are probably different views and we have heard the same views now for quite a long time. Perhaps it would be well to talk a little bit about some of the other points of view that might be available and might be discussed later. I understand this is not actually on the issue but, rather, on a motion to proceed thereto. It is a very important issue, of course.

Nothing could be more important than homeland security. We have talked about it and we continue to talk about it at great length. The fact is, it is a high priority, certainly, for all of us to protect the homeland. In order to do that, we need to have a homeland security department with the most effective management that we can have, the most effective employees, and a system that works as effectively as possible. So we support plans that protect workers through civil rights, equal opportunity guarantees, whistleblower protections, and all those fundamental rights which will be kept. Accountability is also a must, and giving the department flexibility in hiring and firing and creating a powerful deterrent for others to ensure they don't engage in behavior that would endanger homeland protection.

The bill now before us will compromise national security and place more importance, frankly, on bureaucracy and bureaucratic security than on national security. That really is not the issue here.

This is not a new issue. The President has the authority in every other agency, but there seems to be an inclination to be able to roll it back for the Department of Homeland Security. Under this bill, the President would have more flexibility to make decisions—or should have—for reasons of national security, and for HUD, for the Department of Education, he would have more than he does under this proposal. That seems strange to me. This is a proposal that deals with those kinds of emergencies—the things that are changeable—and flexibility needs to be there.

So it seems to me that without some basic flexibility to manage, freedom to hire the right people, fire the wrong people, that national security would be at risk and not be secure. Here are some examples. The Senate bill prevents the President from holding services accountable. Last month, two America West pilots showed up to work drunk. They showed up on Monday and were fired on Tuesday. If they had been INS personnel, it would have taken 18 months—540 days—to be held accountable. These are the kinds of issues with which we have to deal. This is not the normal effort. There is a bottom line that the President does need to have sufficient flexibility. After all, it is the President and the people in the executive branch who are going to do the job. What we do is give them the opportunity and the flexibility to do it.

Certainly there are controls. These controls will not be gone. But we have to provide the opportunity to the person who will be responsible for carrying out this role. It is easy to sit here and talk about all the restraints we should have because we do not have to do that job; someone else does.

The Senate bill does not provide the new Department budget transfer authority. Without transfer authority, if intelligence indicated terrorists were developing a new type of biological weapon, the Secretary would be unable to transfer funds from one division to another to acquire additional medicines or vaccines or improve detection equipment. It does not provide the flexibility to attract, hire, and reward good performance or hold poor performers accountable. That is what we need to do in all of Government, but more particularly in this Department where they are going to face issues they have never before faced.

The Office of Personnel Management reports it can take up to 5 months or more to hire a new Federal employee and 18 months to terminate. If one is not getting the job done, is this what we want in homeland defense? I do not think so.

The bill does not provide for reorganization authority. The Senate bill will prevent the new Secretary from consolidating inspection work of the Customs Service, Border Patrol, and Agriculture inspectors at our ports of entry, leaving the current seam between these activities. Frankly, that has been the weakness in our system since September 11—there is information here, there is information there, and we need to bring it together in a seamless way, and that is one of the strengths and one of the purposes of this whole operation. Yet this bill will not allow that to happen.

It will strip the President of existing authority to act to preserve national security. The Senate would take away the President's existing authority to exempt agencies in the new Department of collective bargaining requirements where national security requires it. Ever since President Jimmy Carter used this important national security authority in time of war—we are in a war of terrorism. To weaken the President's authority seems to be contradictory of where we are or where we need to go.

Certainly, there needs to be great discussion, and I admire the emphasis and effort that has been made. I certainly respect the judgment everyone brings to this Chamber, but there are differences of view, and they ought to be reflected, and they will be reflected, in the bill. We are getting the impression today, however, that there is nothing right about the bill, that the way the President has requested it is all wrong, and that cannot be the case. There has to be a balance, and I am sure there will be an effort to strike a balance.

Of course, we have to recognize rules that do protect Federal workers. And, indeed, there should be rules. They represent the best in America, and they deserve strong civil service protections under the President's plan. Employees of the new Department will continue to be protected by important civil service laws, rules, and regulations that protect them against discrimination on the basis of age, disability, race, color, or religion. Those protections will be there, protected by the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Social Security Act, the Civil Rights Act, the Hatch Act, Government ethical standards, and they should continue, and indeed they will.

I know this is a very important issue. I know also that many Senators have worked very hard and are seeking to do what they believe is best to put together this homeland defense bill. But I do believe there has to be some recognition that this is different, that we are asking the executive branch to carry out a job that is unusual in a different time. It has to have some flexibility so that the decisions to accomplish what it is all about can be made. That is what the President and those who have put together this original proposition are for.

A letter has been written by the former Governor of Pennsylvania that lays out the need for these flexibilities very persuasively. I happen to agree. Certainly there are limits to what we want to do, but we do want to make this a successful effort and give those who are in charge of handling it the flexibility to make it work. I hope we will balance this bill.

Mr. President, I appreciate the time. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I know Senator BOXER is expected around 5. I would like to speak for a few moments until then.

I thank my colleague from Wyoming for his statement. To pick up on what he said, that one might get the impression listening to the debate that there was not anything good in this bill—specifically in the President's proposal on homeland security—there is a natural way, when amendments are filed, to focus on where we disagree, where the amendment disagrees with the underlying bill. But there is a big iceberg under the surface on which there seems to be disagreement. On that there is great agreement. In fact, I believe, though it is hard to quantify this, that more than 90 percent of the bill the Governmental Affairs Committee approved in late July is exactly the same as what President Bush desires. It is quite similar to the bill the Democratic majority on the committee adopted by a 9-to-7 vote in May which, in turn, is similar to the proposal of the commission headed by our colleagues, former Senators Gary Hart and Warren Rudman.

There is enormous agreement on what I would say are the guts of this bill and the guts of a new Department of Homeland Security: Coordinate the disparate agencies that are now disorganized, overlapping, creating gaps and vulnerabilities that terrorists took advantage of on September 11 and will again unless we close those gaps and eliminate those vulnerabilities. We cannot let that happen. Border security agencies are being brought together; emergency response is being centralized, working much more closely with State and local officials; infrastructure protection; intelligence, most important, to create that one place where all the dots come together so that we can see the terrorist plots before they are carried out and stop them; science and technology. Let's use the brain power, the innovation, as the Defense Department has, to make us as successful in the battle to defend the American people at home as those technological innovations have made us abroad in the fight in pursuit of our principles and our national interest.

Most of this proposal enjoys broad bipartisan support. There are a few parts of the proposal right at the center which are in dispute. I understand the President does not support our proposal for a strong intelligence division in the new Department. It is critically important to break down the barriers that existed and still exist, to some degree, between the FBI, the CIA, local law enforcement, and State and local law enforcement as opposed to Federal law enforcement; bring all those dots together on one table so they can see the outline of what is coming and stop it before it happens.

There is dispute from the White House on our national office to combat terrorism because we want the nomination of the director of that office to be approved by the Senate. So these are real disputes related to homeland security.

The dispute that is going on now and the question of civil service rights is not relevant. I hate to see it stand as an obstacle in the path to adopting legislation creating a Department of Homeland Security which, as I say, will give the President at least 90 percent of what he wants in this new Department. In fact, far from limiting the authority of the new Secretary of Homeland Security with regard to the management flexibility that that Secretary has, our legislation protects the existing flexibility in law.

The new Secretary would be able to remove employees for poor performance, transfer employees as needed, reward and give bonuses to those who perform ably. In fact, we add by this legislation to the existing management flexibility that the new Secretary would have because of a bipartisan amendment worked on very hard and thoughtfully by Senator VOINOVICH and Senator AKAKA which would give the President and the Secretary of Homeland Security new powers to reward employees, attract top talent and reshape the workforce. It is quite an advance.

So far from limiting the management flexibility of the new Secretary, we are increasing it beyond what any other Secretary has today, and we give the administration an open invitation, specifically in the letter in regard to the legislation we are proposing, by requiring the Secretary to come back every 6 months and to offer legislative recommendations.

We specifically enumerate this again on personnel management that emerges from the experience the Secretary has over those 6 months.

We have to remember that the civil service system evolved for a reason. It was designed to create some accountability, to protect the Federal workforce from favoritism, from patronage, from politicization, by creating a transparent framework for a merit-based personnel system. Obviously, it is not perfect. That is why we included these major reforms in the bill we reported out of our committee. But to essentially discard it, as the President's proposal would do, to give the Secretary and the President effectively unlimited authority to rewrite the civil service rules, would be a real step backward.

A lot of this has to do with accountability. Accountability is an important goal in our public life and our public service. When people are being taken from the place where they work now—28 different agencies and offices, the Customs Service, the Coast Guard, the Transportation Security Agency, FEMA—and they are brought into this new Department, I think most managers in the private sector would want to do it in a way that would encourage those employees to believe we are all on the same team and we expect the most from them, we are going to work with them.

By pulling away these civil service protections, I think we are going to have exactly the opposite effect. At a time when the average worker would naturally be anxious about a change of office or status, we are going to hang a sword over their heads that says no more civil service protection; they will lose their rights and, at worst, their job without the right to protest and seek review.

Responding to the Senator from Wyoming, I say he is right, that some of our colleagues have not said enough positively either about the President's proposal particularly, because it is embraced in so much of what the committee will bring to the floor.

There are these disagreements. I hope we can work them out. I hope where they are fundamental, we can put them off for 6 months and do the urgent work, which is to get this bill done.

Let me say a word while I am speaking about items in dispute that I hope can be put off. This is the question of collective bargaining. I must say I have learned a lot about this. I have not been involved in some of these questions for a while, and I learned that collective bargaining rights were extended to Federal employees for the first time in 1962 by Executive order of President Kennedy and then were embraced in statute in 1978 under President Carter. In both the Executive order and the statute, there was a provision made that reflected, I think, special concerns during the cold war which said that if the President determined that union membership in a given agency or office was inconsistent with national security, the President could remove the right to collectively bargain without giving a reason other than to say it was inconsistent with national security, without any right of review or appeal by the employees who were therefore losing a basic right, which is to join a union.

I do point out that Federal employees can neither strike nor in most cases do they negotiate for their salaries, which are usually set by statute.

I am going to stop for a moment and ask my friend and colleague from Pennsylvania whether he would like to address the Senate on the motion before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. I had not expected to address the Senate on this issue, but I never turn down an invitation.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Should I rescind my offer?

Mr. SPECTER. The Senator could, but not after it has been accepted.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Go right ahead. We both learned that at the same law school.

Mr. SPECTER. Senator LIEBERMAN and I went to the same law school, and I think he knows one can rescind an offer, but not after it is accepted. At that point, it is too late.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I am pleased to have the Senator have the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. I am glad to see the legislation on homeland security on the floor. This is historic legislation. As the distinguished Senator from Connecticut has said, this is maybe the most important bill that will come out of his committee during his tenure. It is my hope we can move through the bill, go to conference, and have legislation on the President's desk which the President can accept.

One of the key points at issue is the way the analysis of intelligence is going to be structured, and it is my hope that we will be able to take a step at this time on reforms which have long been in the making.

When I chaired the Intelligence Committee in the 104th Congress, I proposed legislation which would have brought under one umbrella the CIA and all of the intelligence agencies. There is on the President's desk now a similar proposal. It would be acceptable to this Senator to have that umbrella control really anywhere, but the turf wars which are well-known to be endemic and epidemic in this city have prevented that kind of umbrella or overview.

The proposal which I think is indispensable is not to change the operation of the CIA or the FBI or the Defense Intelligence Agency or National Security, but when it comes to analysis, to bring it all together so that the analysts are under one umbrella. I believe that had there been an umbrella prior to September 11, 2001, there is a good chance that 9/11 could have been prevented.

We know by hindsight about the FBI report out of Phoenix, and about the young man who had Osama bin Laden's picture on his wall while studying flight training, as well as other indicia of connections to Osama bin Laden. We know about the application for a warrant under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of Zacarias Moussaoui, which would have yielded very substantial information about his connections to al-Qaeda. We know about the two at Kuala Lumpur, known to the CIA, but not communicated to the FBI or Immigration and Naturalization Service in a timely way. We know of the information from the National Security Agency on September 10, a threat, that was not translated until September 12. There are other factors at issue here where we could have connected the dots, as the metaphor is used.

This bill is a very substantial undertaking. I discussed the matter on a number of occasions with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee who raises a valid consideration that this bill may be going too far in the sense that it takes in a great deal of territory. It does that. However, the question is, When will it be done, if not now?

The business of consolidating Federal agencies is a Herculean task facing all sorts of obstacles, and it is only the event of 9/11 and the threat of another 9/11 which is a motivating factor to make these enormous changes.

Earlier today I heard the Senator from Tennessee say next year would be time enough to study the intelligence agencies. There is one big problem with that: The Senator from Tennessee will not be here next year. We need to take advantage of his skill this year.

Perhaps almost as important as the skill of the Senator from Tennessee is the momentum which we have. I have offered to give him some tips on his new job. I saw a headline in the paper the other day, "Senator Thompson Demoted to District Attorney." First of all, I do not know that it is a demotion because I have held that position. However, that is what the headline said, Senator THOMPSON demoted.

I was surfing on Sunday. It is hard to surf and not see Senator THOMPSON or Senator LIEBERMAN, or both of them. Senator THOMPSON was in a heated exchange with former Secretary Eagleburger, and then the program was interrupted for some entertainment. I thought Secretary Eagleburger and Senator THOMPSON were entertaining. They put on a portion of this television show. I wonder how many ex-district attorneys in the Senate turned down that television contract before Senator THOMPSON got it?

At any rate, Senator THOMPSON was sitting behind a big desk in a dimly lit room and two assistant district attorneys approach him. I could not get the gist of it entirely, but I guess the thrust of it was someone in the room was in favor of legalizing drugs. The comment was made: What about our war on drugs? This District Attorney Thompson said: We have to have a war on something in Congress for people to be elected.

It seemed a little cynical for him to turn on his colleagues even before he is on his new payroll. I trust the Ethics Committee would not let him be on the payroll yet, although he is doing those shows.

Back to a serious vein, this is the time to do it. I talked to Governor Ridge after a meeting he had with the President today. I have supplied him with language and I sent a copy of it to Senator LIEBERMAN and a copy to Senator THOMPSON. The President wants to be sure that the President has the authority to continue to work with the CIA as he always has. Absolutely, he should have that authority. He does have that authority. There is nothing we can do in legislation that would change it. The change in the language was made to have the analysis groups under one umbrella, subject to the President's direction to the contrary.

An earlier draft stated the reverse, that the President can direct all of these intelligence agencies to coordinate. You cannot wait for the President to make a direction. He is too busy to do it. The generalization has to be that they will be working together under one umbrella, and they will be coordinating the analysis, but this must be made explicit in statute. If the President wants to change that, of course he can. I do not think he needs that authority in the statute, but I am pleased to eliminate any question about it. It is my hope we can find some common ground on that question.

Washington, DC, has a way of having matters slide if we do not strike while the iron is hot. It is hard to get anything done in Washington, DC, while the iron is hot. However, when it cools off, it is extraordinarily difficult. It has been a long time and many efforts have been made to bring these agencies together. It is a limited juncture to call on the analytical sections to be under one umbrella.

Homeland security will do a lot in response to another 9/11, but if that happens, it is really a very sad situation. Ninety-nine percent of our effort needs to be made to prevent it. If we have to respond to another 9/11, we are in deep trouble. Maybe something even more serious may occur—not that 9/11 was not serious enough, but it may involve weapons of mass destruction. Who knows what it may involve. We have a very heavy responsibility to do everything we can to prevent it. When we look at what was known before, with the dots there, and the possibility of putting them together, that is what we have to work toward.

I have worked a lot with the principals on this issue. I had the opportunity to serve on the Governmental Affairs Committee. I know the work of Senator THOMPSON, who was chairman, and Senator LIEBERMAN, who is now chairman. We have structured this to accommodate all of the competing interests.

I think it will probably be a long day before Senator LIEBERMAN will make an ex parte invitation for me to speak again. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I do not regret the acceptance by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I thank him very much for his remarks. He went right to the heart of one of the most important debates we will have on the bill, which is how do we structure the intelligence division of this new Department to make sure that we never again look back, as we have now after September 11, and say these barriers to communication between the FBI, the CIA, a whole bunch of people, if those barriers had been broken, and all the information was in one place, we might well have been able to prevent September 11. We have to have it within our power to do that.

I understand some of the concerns of the White House, but I do think the phrasing that Senator SPECTER has talked about is just right. I hope he may play a role in bringing us all together on this. I thank him, also, for the fact that he was my lead cosponsor; I was his lead cosponsor in October of last year when we introduced the original version of the bill creating the Department of Homeland Security which, in fairness, was based in good measure on the recommendation of the Hart-Rudman Commission. I look forward to his active participation in this debate and the days ahead.

Under a previous order, I believe Senator BOXER was to be recognized next, with the time to be taken from Senator BYRD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank Senator LIEBERMAN for all his hard work on this bill, and Senator THOMPSON as well. I thank Senator BYRD because in his 50 years in Congress, he has seen a lot and he has raised some very important issues at which this Senate ought to look. I rise to say thank you to him and to make note that when Senator LIEBERMAN first brought the concept of Homeland Security and a Cabinet-level position for Tom Ridge, this administration was not for that in any way, shape, or form.

It is my understanding not having been on the committee, to my sadness—maybe if I was, I would have had more to say in how this bill would come about—my understanding is that not one Republican voted for the first version of that bill in the committee itself.

So we see a real transition from something that was an idea Senator LIEBERMAN had, the Democrats supported, to one that has been embraced, with some very important differences that will come out on this floor. I want to talk to some of those, as well as some of my own concerns.

I have been in elected life now for 26 years—not as long as Senator BYRD, but long enough to know that reshuffling a structure doesn't necessarily mean you are going to solve your problem. As a matter of fact, it could in many ways make people less accountable, hiding under more layers of bureaucracy. So I approach this debate with an attitude that basically says I am not so sure about this.

I think what Senator BYRD is trying to do here by speaking with some of us who have some of these problems with the bill is to try to see if we can let the Senate work its will and shape this so it does not become an unwieldy bureaucracy that will be not more accountable but less accountable.

We all know what brought us together as a country was what happened on September 11. We will never forget it, and we will commemorate it. But I agree with those who say we have to do this right. It would be a disservice to those who were so adversely impacted if we were to set some artificial deadline for restructuring of the Government, a restructuring which is so huge that a Brookings Institution scholar, Paul Light, said:

I would rank it the No. 1 reorganization in American history in terms of difficulty.

My view is this should be done right. We should keep congressional accountability in the process and not give up the very important powers we have under the Constitution, the checks and balances, not just for this administration but for any administration.

It is interesting to hear President Bush's own words. He says it is the most extensive reorganization of the Federal Government since the 1940s.

The amendment is 350 pages. I say to Senator LIEBERMAN, I believe he has done an incredible job of improving the bill from the House version, and I certainly shudder to think if that House version were to become law because it has a lot of serious problems. So I say straight out to Senator LIEBERMAN, thank you for your work in this regard.

Senator CONRAD made a point today to some of us, stating he had heard from the OMB Director way before September 11 that changing the civil service protections was one of the things this administration has always wanted to do and that all the things that are contained in the House bill, as they would pertain to the employees of this new organization, are not new things to this administration. They have wanted to break the back, if you will, of whistleblower protection in other cases. They have wanted to break the back of any type of collective bargaining.

As we know, Federal employees cannot strike, nor should they. That is not an issue. But this administration would like to weaken the protections that do belong to Federal employees.

I think Senator LIEBERMAN made a very good point when he said, in a conversation with some of us in leadership, that the protections in his bill that are afforded to the Federal employees who would work in homeland defense are the very same protections that are afforded to the Department of Defense civilian employees.

So it seems to me a rather cruel thing to say you are creating a Department that, next to the Department of Defense—and maybe even in some cases, in some circumstances, even more—for these people who would be put in the line of fire, that we would, as one of the first things, look at weakening the rights they are afforded and make them second-class citizens. This is very disturbing to me.

Think back to September 11, to the heroes of September 11. They were not anyone in this Chamber. They were not anyone in the back room writing this bill. They were working people. They were people, yes, who were afforded the protections of collective bargaining; yes, afforded the protections of union membership. They never looked at their watch and said: Oh, gee, I have been on the 74th floor of the World Trade Center, and now I have worked 8 hours and I am coming down.

I just think it is most unfortunate that the President would not take this opportunity to keep us together here, focused on protecting our magnificent country and the people who reside therein, and instead use it as an opportunity to get through some of the things he was unable to get through in other bills. It is very disturbing to me.

I think Senator LIEBERMAN has shown tremendous leadership in standing strong for those protections. Again, the heroes of September 11 were union members. The heroes of September 11 never let us down. How do you create a new Department such as this and undercut these employees when they need to be at their top performance level, where they need to have the best morale, where they need to believe they are not treated worse, certainly, than any other Federal employee?

There are other things Senator LIEBERMAN did in this bill that I applaud. A weakening of the Freedom of Information Act that is in the House bill—that would have been a mess for us. Many of our communities want to know what chemicals are polluting their air, ground, and water. Again, some in the House use this as a way to weaken that act and say: We cannot give out that information; the terrorists may get it. A mother of little children needs to know if there is arsenic in a plant, if there is a harmful pollutant at a plant. Therefore, I am very pleased that, with Senator LEAHY's help, where he was able to fix this, that is not a problem.

For the remainder of my remarks, I focus on the Federal Emergency Management Administration and a couple of other agencies that were just lifted and taken lock, stock, and barrel into this new, enormous creation called the Department of Homeland Security. In California, we suffer from every kind of natural disaster you can imagine, from earthquakes to fire, to flood, to drought, to pestilence. We see it all. Unfortunately, we see it often.

People sometimes say to me: Senator, why do people want to stay in California? Every other month, you are having another crisis.

I guess you have to just be there to understand. You are living in an area that is God's gift to the world. With that beauty come all these problems.

The bottom line of it is, we, unfortunately, have a terrible share of these disasters. Putting the Federal Emergency Management Administration, lock, stock and barrel, into this new Department I just think is going to be a real problem for us. Why not just take those folks in the Department who would work on homeland security but leave the others in place?

It took many years to straighten out the problems of FEMA. I have gone through the worst of it. Under President Clinton and under James Lee Witt, we saw a tremendous uplifting of FEMA's morale. They know what they are doing now. All of us, Democrats and Republicans, have benefited from that. Our people have benefited from that. Now we are moving this, lock, stock and barrel, and I am very worried about accountability.

Others have spoken of the Coast Guard. I feel the same way about that. Search and rescue—last year, the Coast Guard saved 530 lives in California. I know how important they are to homeland security, but the same thing should apply here. You do not have to lift the whole thing up, lock, stock, and barrel.

We also have the INS situation, where the immigration and naturalization services are very far behind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mrs. BOXER. I ask for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I yield 2 additional minutes to the distinguished Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank Senator BYRD. Now that he is here, I can tell him how much I appreciate his raising the red flags.

The INS, backlogged with processing immigration—good people, kind people, family people. It seems to me, again, we should have done this in a little bit of a different way.

If we really want to do something for homeland security, I would rather see us spend the $5 billion that we passed in this Senate that spoke to the need of homeland security and aviation security. We need more machines to check bags for bombs. We know the things we need to do at our ports. We lack the infrastructure. Instead of spending time moving pegs on a board and lifting agencies from one desk to another, I would rather go back and send the President that $5 billion and say to him that we don't understand why he refused to spend this money. If he is so concerned about homeland security, why did he say he wasn't going to spend this? He said it was bad for the economy because of the deficit.

I was an economics major. One thing we know is that if the Government spends and invests in the needs of the people, such as homeland security, it is going to create thousands of jobs, and it would do something that is important. It doesn't help the economy to sit on that money. Frankly, it does not help the economy or homeland security if you create a big bureaucracy and they have no place to even put these people. And, by the way, if they are just going to be changed in name only, it is very confusing to me why we are doing this.

From all of my years in public life, I think we could have done this in a very lean and mean way. We could have made this a Cabinet-level position, which most of us supported. If the President wanted it to happen, he could have said we are going to have people dispatched who report to Tom Ridge and to each of these agencies and start to bring back and forth to him what we need to do in those agencies.

I thank you very much, Mr. President. I have a lot of serious questions about this.

I thank my colleagues for their consideration.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, we have had a good discussion on this motion to proceed.

I thank Senator BYRD for doing what he has done. I will say publicly what I told him privately before the recess: I thought he was doing all of us a favor by slowing us down a little bit. There was an awful lot of talk about we must get this done by September 11 for symbolic reasons, and symbolism is important. But it is not nearly as important as it is to get this right. We will not get it right forever. We will be dealing with it probably for some time to come. But it is important to get it as right as we can. I think it is very important that we take the time necessary to do that. We can disagree as to how long is enough time. But I do think we can all agree that in retrospect, we were kind of headed toward a stampede there for a little while where we wanted to get something passed so we could say we got something passed. That receives short-term benefits maybe to us but it doesn't do much in terms of long-term benefits to the country. I think we are where we need to be now. We have come back. We have had a chance to digest this, discuss it, debate it in a public forum, and now to discuss it here on the floor.

Senator BYRD made some very interesting and valid points about things that we need to consider. He, I think rightfully, pointed out that the NSA creation was probably the model that not only the President is going by, but the model that we all can have in terms of importance and in terms of how long it takes to put these things together. It took a good while to put the National Security Agency together. I believe it took 6 months between the time the bill was introduced and the time that it was passed. I point out that it was after a war. I do think probably Congress had a little more leisure during those days than we have. It was 2 years after the war. Of course, we are just beginning our endeavor. We don't have quite the leisure that perhaps the Congress did at that time.

We have been considering the overall concept one way or another, formally or informally, for some time. The Gilmore Commission came in December of 2000 with a recommendation for a Homeland Security Department. The Hart-Rudman Commission came out in February, I believe, of last year, with a recommendation. We didn't pay enough attention to it soon enough. But it was out there. It was discussed and considered at that time. Congress, from time to time, has certainly considered many of the component problems that have led to this bill.

For example, the problems with the INS are certainly no secret. We have been dealing with that. We have been dealing with other problems the Government has.

I suggest the time is ripe, and there is no reason now for us not to address this issue after we have had a full-fledged discussion. I think the analogy to the Transportation Security Administration that was referred to and that was referred to in the newspaper today is a good one. I think it shows the difficulty that we have when we establish an agency that is having to recreate itself on the one hand and do the job on the other simultaneously. That is a very good point. What we are doing here in terms of the Department of Homeland Security is TSA enlarged in many respects.

That leads me to perhaps a slightly different conclusion. That leads me to the conclusion that what we need to do to avoid that problem is to give the people who are in charge and have the responsibility for making sure this works the tools they can use to make it work. We had a civil service organization system, and we had a management system, the paradigm for which was established many years ago. We live in a different world now. That is what the President is talking about when he is talking about managerial flexibility and having the tools with which to manage this thing.

If you talk to corporate leaders who have undergone transitions that are much less complicated than what we are doing, they talk about how difficult it is and how important it is to have the right kind of culture but also to have the managerial talent, the managerial wherewithal and flexibility to address those thousands of problems and difficulties that you are going to have in trying to pull all these factors together. These corporate managers don't even have Congress to answer to or deal with or worry about. Certainly, when it comes to Government, Congress cannot deal with each of these issues.

We have to either trust our leadership to the point of giving them some managerial flexibility or not. I think that is what we are doing here. That is what this is all about. It is not a major grant of new power; it is a granting of power by Congress after thorough deliberation to better manage what Congress is establishing within the discretion of Congress, and having the annual appropriations process, among other hearings and considerations, in which to evaluate what is going on. I think we have to give that kind of authority if we are going to place on these people the kinds of responsibilities that we are placing on them.

There has been a concern expressed about personal liberties. Democracy always has to—especially a democracy under attack—balance the national security of the country with the personal liberties that we hold so dear. I think we have done a pretty good job of that. Some of the things that the administration has done have been somewhat controversial. They are not really reflected in this bill. This bill really doesn't deal with any of those things. But I do think it is appropriate to point out that in other times President Lincoln instituted habeas corpus. President Roosevelt had internments, and things of that nature. Other Presidents have taken rather severe action when they deemed it necessary in times of war and in times of national security. We are not even approaching things of that nature. And we are not really even approaching the subject matter in this bill.

So I respectfully suggest that there is no danger here of giving the President too much power. The danger, quite frankly, is that we are establishing a new Department that is complex, multifaceted, and is going to be difficult to organize without giving the President some authority that several other Government agencies already have, that the Congress has already given them.

We will have an opportunity to discuss this later when appropriate amendments come up. But in the area of national security, and in the area of flexibility with regard to some of these agencies, what the President is basically asking for is the same authority that prior Presidents have had in the national security area, and the same authority for this new Department that other Department heads already have. So I do not think we need to concern ourselves overly about that. But I will say that it is refreshing to stand on this floor, to sit and listen to someone such as Senator BYRD talk about first principles, talk about the basic function of government, talk about the things the forefathers concerned themselves with, and the things we should concern ourselves with as we go forward with this bill. But I suggest that it is time we go forward.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-four minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I begin my closing remarks where I should begin, by thanking Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator THOMPSON for the leadership they have demonstrated in holding hearings, in holding the markups, in exploring the questions that were asked, in attempting to find solutions to questions and concerns and problems that occurred to them through others and sometimes not through others. I thank these two Senators who represent, I believe, the finest.

I have been a Member of the body now 44 years next January 3, the Lord willing. The fine old woman who raised me taught me to say that: I will do thus and so or so and so, the Lord willing. Of course, that comes from the Book of James, the 4th chapter, and the 14th and 15th verses: Don't say that you will go to a city tomorrow and that you will purchase thus and so and that you will do thus and so, but say, the Lord willing, you will go and do thus and so.

And I thank these Senators. I am glad that the Good Lord has permitted me to live in this age when we can have Senators who acquire the high qualities of the two Senators who are about to manage the legislation that will create a Homeland Security Department.

I favor the creation of a Homeland Security Department. And I think that the Senate within the next few minutes should vote unanimously to proceed to take up this legislation. That is the way it should be done. Let's take it up, and then let the Senate work its will.

I thank the two leaders for their cooperation in helping to bring this about and in providing a time and an opportunity when we can mull over and talk about and decide these great questions that confront us.

I would have resisted going to the bill had the motion been made prior to the August recess. I would have resisted with all of my heart and all of my strength. But I do not resist going to the bill now. With the Senate in recess, we have had a month in which to read the House bill, which largely reflects the administration's position, to read also the legislation that has been reported from Senator LIEBERMAN's and Senator THOMPSON's committee. And I have taken occasion to do just that.

Now, when we proceed to take up the House bill, it will be done, and then, at some point, presumably early on, Senator LIEBERMAN will offer his substitute. He will offer the committee of the committee which he chairs. And the Senate will then have both bills before it. The underlying measure will be the House bill. And then there will be the substitute, which will be a clean bill reported by Senator LIEBERMAN's committee. So the Senate will have before it both bills. Senators may proceed to amend the underlying bill. They may proceed to amend Senator LIEBERMAN's bill, the substitute. We will have both bills before us.

I call to the attention of Senators that once we pass this bill, whatever the bill is that the Senate passes—I am not saying I am going to vote for it; I may—but whenever the Senate passes legislation dealing with the creation of a Department of Homeland Security, then that is the last time the Senate will visit the matter until the legislation comes back from the committee of conference. And that legislation will be in the form of a conference report, which cannot be amended. Senators will have to take that measure, then, up or down.

So this is it. This is our chance, and our only chance, to fully discuss and amend the legislation. And I hope Senators will approach the matter in that vein, realizing that the product that emanates from this Senate, after whatever time we take to debate and vote on it, will be the final product the Senate itself will have had an opportunity to mold and to amend. That is it.

We are going to have to live with that. I have been greatly concerned about the legislation, as I have read it, that the House has passed, and with particular reference to title VIII of that bill, which I will not go into now.

But I have been greatly concerned. I am concerned that the Constitution and its principles and the rights and privileges that flow from that great document—which has no equal in the world as far as governmental, organic documents are concerned, no equal—

I am concerned that those rights and prerogatives that flow from that document will have been impinged upon. I am greatly concerned about the constitutionality, in whole or in part, of some of the things that we are about to do—if we do them—that are particularly contained in the House bill.

Now, we may pass legislation that is unconstitutional, and if it is never tried out in courts, it may be out there and there may not come an occasion where there is a case or controversy which goes to court. But I say that we have a responsibility.

I used to hear Sam Ervin, that eminent jurist and great late Senator from North Carolina, say that we in the Senate have a duty to determine in our own minds the constitutionality of measures that we pass.

That is why I joined with Senators on both sides of the aisle in bringing the line-item veto and pushing that matter to a decision by the U.S. Supreme Court. Of course, we didn't have standing, as the Court determined, but we did proceed; but those who did have standing were pursuing it. Thank God, somebody pursued it, and I say thank God to the Supreme Court of the United States for throwing out that bad legislation. I said it was bad and the Court agreed.

Here we are today with legislation that can certainly be dangerous in many ways. I have talked about some of those things, and I will have a further opportunity. But before I proceed with my final prepared remarks, let me thank Senator THOMPSON and Senator LIEBERMAN. I thank Senator THOMPSON for his closing remarks today, and I also thank Senator LIEBERMAN. These are gentlemen and I respect them as gentlemen. They have high and noble principles. That cannot be said of all men, of course.

We are here today because nearly 11 months ago, 19 men commandeered 4 aircraft. Their goal we know all too well. They crashed one aircraft into the Pentagon. One hurtled into the north tower of the World Trade Center. Another tore into the south tower a few minutes later. The men and women aboard the final plane, after learning of the fate of the others, decided to resist the hijackers. They knew that, in all likelihood, they were about to die. But they entered into the embrace of death willingly after having decided to do what they could do to prevent the untimely and abrupt death of other men and women.

I have no doubt, as we were taken out of this Capitol that day, ushered out by the policemen here, that that last plane was coming to hit this Capitol or the White House—one or the other. I just know in my own mind that it was headed here. But those men and women on that plane died for us. Their plane crashed in rural Pennsylvania. If not for the heroic efforts of those men and women, we would have scores of additional names to remember as victims of the worse terrorist attack in the history of our country.

We are here today debating because of those 19 hijackers. We are here because of the rescue workers who moved so quickly, so selflessly, so valiantly to save lives, only to lose their own while carrying out their duty. We are here because of those thousands of men and women who, on September 11, 1 year ago, were sitting at the desks, walking through the halls, doing their jobs, only to have such brutality bring to an end their precious lives, and so abruptly. They never had time to say goodbye to their loved ones. We are here, Senators, because we can never forget that day and because we never want this Nation to have to go through and experience the horrors of that day again.

In many ways, the creation of a new Department of Homeland Security will serve as a legacy to those more than 3,000 men and women who had lost their lives on that clear fall day 1 year ago. We must not rush to create a department in the memory of those who lost their lives on September 11. If that Homeland Security Department does not better prevent another attack, what becomes of the sacrifice of those lives almost 1 year ago? If in the rush to create a new department we make Americans more vulnerable to attack while the transition is going forward rather than less, what kind of a legacy does that leave? What tribute does this Congress and this President pay to the victims of September 11 if we only tangle the lines of homeland security rather than straighten them and strengthen them?

I believe that much is to be said in gratitude to Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator THOMPSON and their committee for their efforts to straighten the lines. I honor and respect and pay tribute to these Senators and to the product which they have given this Senate and which we will soon be discussing. But having been in various and sundry legislative branches at the State and local levels and at the Federal level, I know there is no committee, including the one I chair, that can be perfect.

As an experienced legislator, I look at this product in that fashion. It is a good product. It is a much better product than that which the House has sent us after 2 days of floor debate. But I think the full Senate can do better.

I believe that if we act in haste to pass this legislation, then we pay no tribute, we honor, no memory.

The legislation creates a new Department of Homeland Security. It is originally based on the plan of four men—not exactly the committee of five which wrote the Declaration of Independence. It is quite a different group. I don't say that disparagingly of the four fine men who came up with this idea in the bowels of the White House. But the legislation to create a new Department is based on the plan that originally was hatched in the subterranean caverns of the White House—four men, fine men, sitting in the depths of the White House, trying to counter mounting political pressures. These four men have done nothing more, really, than shuffle boxes on a piece of paper.

The administration calls this the largest reorganization of Government since World War II. I say it is the largest reorganization of Government since our constitutional Framers sat at the Convention in 1787. They reorganized the Government under the Articles of Confederation. Under that Government, under the Articles of Confederation, the Congress was the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. So those men reorganized the Government and gave to the various States, to vote on in their ratifying conventions, this product that was signed by those men in Philadelphia on September 17, 1787.

That was the first reorganization. That was the greatest reorganization because no longer do we operate under the Articles of Confederation but we operate under the Constitution of the United States. So now we have come to another reorganization proposal, the one we have been discussing.

Terrorists have the advantage of knowing when they will strike, where they will strike, and how they will strike. Law-abiding men and women do not know when the terrorists will attack, where they will attack, or how they will attack. If the truth be told, there is no department that this Congress can conceive that alone can save Americans from terrorist attacks. Moving a few squares on a flowchart will not, on its own, save lives.

I remain suspicious about a complex, extensive reorganization plan originally authored only by a group of four men in absolute secret, a plan which we are told was not revealed until the day the President revealed it, at which time several of the Department heads, whose Departments would be affected by the plan, had not been contacted and not been consulted. That is what I understand from reading the press. So I remain suspicious about a complex, extensive reorganization plan authored only by a group of four men in absolute secret. I believe such a plan is likely—likely—to be politically motivated somewhere along the line. There is an old fiddle tune I used to play, “Somewhere Along the Line.”

I hope that is not true. I hope the motivations were pure, but should we not all be a little suspicious of this process? Congress should be especially careful, given the way this plan was formulated. We ought to consider our actions thoroughly and realize that the steps we take in the next few weeks will have ramifications for decades to come.

In the past few weeks, as the House select committee has held its hearings and the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee has drafted its plan, the focus has not been on how to best save lives. Rather, the focus, in part at least, has been on the “bureaucratic turf wars” that have developed. Should Secret Service be in, or should Secret Service be out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The time under the Senator's control has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have need for a few more minutes. May I call upon the mercy of the distinguished Senator who chairs this committee, if he has time, if he would let this poor Senator from the hills of West Virginia have a few more minutes?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. The Senator is moving me. I say to Senator BYRD, obviously I do not want to cut him off. I guess in return I ask for a certain amount of mercy because I hope to leave in an hour to attend an event at my daughter's school. The Senator may proceed as he will. I do not intend to use the rest of my time, and I hope Senator BYRD will finish with as much dispatch as he can and still make his points.

Mr. REID. Will my friend from West Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. REID. I am wondering, with the three managers of the bill here on this phase of the debate, if we can agree on what time we are going to vote today. The time runs out at 6:37 p.m. It is my understanding that Senators THOMPSON and LIEBERMAN will be willing to give back some of their time.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Yes, Senator THOMPSON has concluded his remarks. When Senator BYRD has finished, I will have concluding remarks that will go no longer than 5 minutes.

Mr. REID. Is Senator BYRD going to speak for 10 minutes?

Mr. BYRD. Well, let me put it this way. As far as I am concerned, we can vote now. As far as I am concerned, we can vote by voice. I intend to vote to proceed to take up this measure, but Senators have been told we would vote. I will stop editorializing on my own remarks and read what I have prepared and sit down.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Fine. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REID. So the answer is we do not have a time certain.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. But no later than 6:36 p.m.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman, Senator LIEBERMAN, for his generosity.

What about the Secret Service, should it be in or out? What about the Coast Guard? Why is the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms left out? While the 170,000 men and women targeted to move into this new Department try to figure out where the desks and telephones will be, the Nation's homeland defense system may be far less effective, not more.

We in the Congress must insist on more information about the fine details, such as what this plan means for the separation of powers, why one agency was selected while others were left out. We must take time to determine if this approach is the best approach or if it is little more than cherry-picking the best agencies while leaving others behind.

There will be those who charge that by moving to slow this legislation, I and others are endangering the lives of Americans and that we are thinking about our pet projects in our own States. What a sorry, empty claim to make. This Congress, at the urging of the Senate Appropriations Committee which I chair, has added $15 billion for homeland security over the course of the past 8 months. That funding has helped us to take immediate steps to make Americans safer from attack and to better prepare our response efforts should another attack occur.

That funding paid for more than 2,200 agents and inspectors to guard our long, porous borders with Canada and Mexico. The foreign student visa program, which has been identified as one of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's chief loopholes, is undergoing a tighter tracking system because of funding that Congress included in its first homeland security funding package within 3 days after the tragedy occurred in New York City.

Across this country, local police officers, firefighters, and emergency medical teams are receiving new training and equipment to handle threats that before last fall they hardly considered possible. Federal law enforcement also benefited from the work of this Congress. Because of the funding initiated by the Appropriations Committee, the FBI started to hire hundreds of new agents. More than 300 additional protective personnel were hired to protect the Nation's nuclear weapons complex. Air marshals have been hired to protect our planes. Seven hundred and fifty food inspectors were hired to ensure the safety of the meals served at America's kitchen tables. We have paid for smallpox vaccines and health department training. We are tightening security at our seaports and purchasing new bomb-detecting equipment at our airports. We are taking steps to protect American lives now, today, and not just waiting for a bureaucratic shuffle to protect us.

Congress, the elected representatives of the people, have done this. Congress also acted to provide additional emergency funding to strengthen terrorism prevention and to give much-needed aid to first responders at the local level. But President Bush has refused to spend some of these critical funds because he and OMB Director Mitch Daniels want to make a point about budget discipline.

If the President is really serious about preventing terror, as he says he is, he should not play politics with this important funding, which by the signature of his name could have been released to the people at the local levels, throughout the land, for the protection of the people and the protection of the infrastructure of our country.

Members of Congress and the President would like to be able to tell the public that they honored the victims of September 11 by creating a new Department for Homeland Security on the anniversary of the tragedy. That is understandable for politicians. But as Senator THOMPSON pointed out, we want the right product. We want to take the time and do the job right.

In a few days, Americans will pause to remember the moment when the airplanes struck the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and the Pennsylvania field. We will remember the mothers and fathers, the brothers and sisters, the firefighters, the police officers, the ambulance drivers. We will remember all of those who lost their lives in those tragic moments. But as we craft this legacy to their lives, we owe them more than a press release. We owe them our best judgment. We owe them rational, responsible action. We owe them a legacy that may truly save other lives, the lives of the people and the families of those who died, the progeny of those fathers whose lives were wiped out in the batting of an eye.

Based on what we know about the legislative proposals before us, there can be no assurance that such a legacy will ever result. I am concerned that the monument that will result from this effort may be one of weakened protections for America's civil servants, one that may allow the security that is our goal to buckle under the weight of an administration's untold agenda. What will this legislation do to the people's rights, to the first amendment, to the second amendment, the third or fourth? Do we know what this bill does to the fundamental protections embodied in the Constitution?

I am concerned about what we do not know about what has been kept from us by an administration adept at dealing in the shadows. I am concerned that this bill goes too far to protect the privacy of the White House and not far enough to protect the privacy of law-abiding citizens outside the White House.

We are being pressed to pass this legislation to protect American lives, but we must not allow ourselves to be blinded to the new threats it may present to our laws and our constitutional system if we pass the legislation for which the administration has asked.

Each of us has an obligation not just to put a new banner over a collection of agencies but to ensure that those agencies work together to protect the American people. Reorganizations of any size have a tendency to drift, to veer off course. A reorganization of the magnitude envisioned is likely to career out of our control if we do not take the necessary steps to keep it on track. We cannot throw up our arms in celebration at the moment a bill is signed into law and walk away wrapped in the folds of glory. If that is all we do, we will surely drop the reins.

This Senate must do everything within its power now to ensure that the promise embodied in this proposed reorganization is kept. We must focus beyond the mere creation of a new Department and grapple with the details of its implementation. We should insist on a clear understanding of the mission of the new Department. We should know the criteria that are used to determine which agencies will be part of it. We should insist that the constitutional rights of the people are protected. We should insist on assurances that this administration will not use this reorganization as a cover to dismantle worker protections. We should insist that the important non-homeland-security work of the transferred agencies is not sacrificed as those agencies assume new missions.

Senators know of my great respect and fondness for history of the ancient Romans. Montesquieu first pointed the way, and having read a great deal of Montesquieu's work, I came to the conclusion that Montesquieu must have been right because he loved the history of the ancient Romans. As a matter of fact, he wrote a history of the ancient Romans. So I decided I would do some of that reading, too.

I close with a quotation. Gaius Petronius Arbiter, a Roman poet and advisor to Nero, is reported to have said:

We trained hard . . . but it seemed that every time we were beginning to form into teams we would be reorganized. I was to learn later in life that we tend to meet any new situation by reorganizing; and a wonderful method it can be for creating the illusion of progress while producing confusion, inefficiency and demoralization.

What a quotation from a Roman 2,000 years ago, and more. Before we rush ahead with so many questions unanswered, let us ensure that the product of our work is not just an illusion but substance. If it is a monument we are building, let it be one that will endure. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I simply thank the very able Senator from West Virginia for once again calling on the Senate to face these very fundamental questions that are involved and which he has been speaking to in the course of the day. I think it behooves all of our colleagues not only to have listened to the able Senator but to go back and read his remarks and to consider them carefully and thoughtfully as we address this major legislation.

Now we are embarked, of course, on creating a new Department, but we need to be very careful in how we do it. We need to be very thorough in how we do it. We need to be very thoughtful in how we do it.

I commend the chairman of the committee, the able Senator from Connecticut, because I think he has brought all of those qualities to this legislation that he has now brought forth in the Senate.

There are very important questions involved here in terms of how the political system works and how the checks and balances work and what the allocation of powers is. Some say this is a fight over turf or over prerogatives. It is no such thing. This is trying to resolve the most basic questions about how our system of self-government is to work and what the balance is to be between the legislative and the executive branches; indeed, the judicial branch is drawn into this, as well.

I hope as we address this legislation in the days to come, my colleagues keep in mind the analysis and the history which the Senator from West Virginia has brought to the floor today. I express my deep appreciation once again. He reminds us of the fundamental questions we confront and of the importance of rising to this occasion.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator for the generous remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I agree with my friend from Maryland: The Senator from West Virginia has made a contribution here with his thoughtful leadership over the years, of course, and his thoughtful statements today. Even when I do not meet the statements with personal agreement, I know he forces me to think about fixed premises that I may bring to the debate, as well as everyone in this case, and that will make the product of our deliberations better than it would otherwise be.

I was thinking about the quote at the end of Senator BYRD's remarks. It is true that reorganization or reform can sometimes not be in the interest of progress and can be a cover for disorganization and an excuse for inaction more broadly.

I do want to argue that this proposal that has come out of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which builds on work that had been done by the Hart-Rudman Commission, which meshed with recommendations from the White House, is a necessary reorganization.

The current state of reality in our Federal Government is that we are disorganized. It is in some ways dysfunctional as it comes to protecting the security of the American people from a threat we have imagined, we have seen some small evidence of over the years. But on September 11 we were shocked from our lethargy and our apathy and our tolerance of disorganization, seeing the painful personal consequences of that disorganization—almost 3,000 Americans dead only because they were Americans, struck in a vicious and savage and cunning way only because they were Americans. They did not have the courage to take us on in a conventional field of battle but struck an undefended target full of innocent Americans.

That disorganization can no longer be tolerated. I have a sense of urgency about this. I look at the evidence we have accumulated about the various ways in which our intelligence and law enforcement personnel could have cooperated, could have shared information prior to September 11. I wonder, could we have prevented this from happening? I look at the way in which we have tolerated disorganization and overlap at our borders with failures of the various Federal agencies there and inability even to communicate with one another. I look at our ports, with 95 percent of the goods coming into the United States of America. Most people are shocked by this number: 95 percent come in by ship, yet the Customs Service is able to truly inspect only 1 percent of the containers coming in.

I could go on and on about airport security pre-September 11 and security of our financial systems, cybersystems, and all the rest. We are just not organized to prevent what happened on September 11 from ever happening again.

In this regard, I have the echo in my mind of a meeting I attended some months ago with families of victims of September 11, mostly families of victims because most of them were from Connecticut, some from New York, who died in the World Trade Center. The plaintive question they asked me was, how could this have happened? I do not want to ever be in a position to face another group of fellow Americans who ask me again, how could this have happened?

I make no claims that adoption of the bill that our committee has reported on will be a guarantee against terrorism. I suppose if someone has so little regard for their own life and other lives that they are prepared to strap bombs around themselves and walk into a crowd, that is not easy to stop. But something as well planned, as comprehensive, with as many contacts with private sector bodies, including flight training schools and public agencies, we should be able to prevent. The only way to begin to do it is to create a structure that is accountable, that has a uniform chain of command, and that will put people in place to overcome the gaps the terrorists took advantage of on September 11.

That is why I have urgently brought this matter to the floor, with the wonderful bipartisan group of members of the Governmental Affairs Committee who contributed substantially to the product on the floor, and the various Members of the Senate on both sides with whom we have worked on parts of this proposal. There were 18 hearings, 3 or 4 days of committee meetings and markup. A lot of work has been done on this, building on work that had been done years before by others, as to how we can best protect the American people from terrorism.

It is time to proceed. We have had a very good opening day of debate. Obviously, there are some differences of opinion regarding the pace of action in Congress or whether the executive branch is seeking or being given too much authority, whether one or another agency that is consolidated by this bill should be consolidated, how strong our intelligence division should be in this Department, how much should we bring matters together. Should we give this President and his successors unprecedented authority over civil service and Federal employees?

All of these matters, I know, will be directly discussed in the days ahead. And many of them, if not all of them, will be subjects of amendment before this Chamber. This is a big bill. It is a big proposal which responds to an urgent problem. As others have said, it would be the largest reorganization of the Federal Government in 50 years, since the post-World War II reorganization of our national security apparatus. That is what the reality of our times requires. It is why we need the debate we will have in the days, and perhaps weeks, ahead.

In the paper today, there is a story that our intelligence service is working with foreign intelligence services and has tracked the movement of gold, substantial amounts of gold, apparently owned by al-Qaida, from Pakistan through Iran, the United Arab Emirates, into Sudan, where it may be in Khartoum now. What does this tell us? That the enemy is out there, that we won a victory, a great victory, in Afghanistan, but that was only the first battle of the war.

Again, the enemy is not out there on a field of battle where we can see them, or in ships at sea. They are in the shadows. They have not diminished their intention to strike at America, and Americans only, because we are America and Americans. Now we, as the representatives of the American people here in Congress, we draw ourselves together, to have our debate, have our discussion, but in the end, to do what we must do to create a Department of Homeland Security that will be a strong line of defense against al-Qaida and anyone else out there intending to strike at the American people here at home.

One thing I do know, in the midst of all the debate, is we are ready to proceed. We have had a good opening day. Many more days of debate will come. But on the specific motion before us now, the motion to proceed, I am sure we are ready to vote.

I yield whatever remaining time I have and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA), and the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from Texas (Mr. GRAMM), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. MURKOWSKI), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SANTORUM), are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

THE NOMINATION OF JUSTICE PRISCILLA OWEN OF TEXAS TO THE U.S. COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I would like to make some brief remarks about the nomination of Justice Priscilla Owen of Texas who has been scheduled for a vote in the Judiciary Committee as early as this Thursday. I cannot say strongly enough how important this vote is for the future of the Judiciary and this Senate.

With the attempt by some to introduce ideology and base politics into the confirmations process, today a sword of Damocles hangs over the future of nominations and our constitutional role and no vote will hint the future more than this upcoming vote on Justice Owen.

Justice Owen has been attacked with orchestrated deceptions, distortions and demagoguery, yet she has the American Bar Association's unanimous rating of well qualified."

In preparing for Justice Owen's vote, I again commend to my colleagues the words of Senator BIDEN when he said some years ago that:

[Judicial confirmation] is not about pro-life or pro-choice, conservative or liberal, it is not about Democrat or Republican. It is about intellectual and professional competence to serve as a member of the third co-equal branch of the Government.

Allow me to make just some brief remarks on the allegations made against Justice Owen which she clarified both in the hearing and in answers to written questions since then.

First, and most outrageously, it was said that she delayed in issuing an opinion in a car accident case involving a boy who subsequently died and that he died while waiting for her decision. And that she raised an issue, court venue, not previously raised by the lawyers.

The truth is that Justice Owen wrote an opinion for the majority in that case just 5 days after the majority reached a decision. The boy died 3 years later. And venue is automatically at issue when the petition is for a new trial and it was both briefed and argued by the lawyers, as was the case. That's the truth.

There is no use in holding hearings and asking written questions if we ignore the answers.

Second, she has been accused of being a "judicial activist" who pursues an outcome-based result.

The truth is that she is a judicious judge who never digresses from the rules of precedent and legal construction. She always grounds her decision in binding authority or judicial rules of decision. The charge that she is a judicial activist is a cynical trick of words from Washington lobbyists who have made their careers defending court decisions of real judicial activists who never let the words of the Constitution stand between them and their social engineering.

Another falsehood is that she is anti-abortion and is out to defeat abortion rights.

The truth is that Owen has never stated her personal views and has ruled in one case for Planned Parenthood and against Operation Rescue pro-life protestors. In the parental involvement cases, Owen repeatedly applied Roe v. Wade and the Supreme Court cases and used them to interpret the legislature's choice of words in the statute.

It is said that in her parental notice cases, Owen sought to limit abortion rights.

The truth is that no abortion right is affected by giving mere notice to parents. And over 600 bypasses of notice have been granted by the courts under the standards Owen and her court established. The Texas Supreme Court merely debated the guidelines for lower courts to apply on a brand new law. The Court sought to effect the legislature's intent: to protect parental involvement rights, the right of parents to guide their children and protect them from harm was at stake, not abortion.

Justice Owen has been called an ideologue who is out of the mainstream.

The truth is that Owen was twice elected in Texas, the last time with 83 percent of the vote. She is a quiet, modest person, who leads her Church choir, and had to be convinced to leave a lucrative law practice to become a judge. She was unanimously rated well-qualified, the highest rating of the ABA, despite the ABA's pro-abortion stance.

It was noted that Justice Owen dissents too often and rules in favor of corporations and big money.

The truth is that she has dissented fewer than 10 percent of the time, that's half the average for any current U.S. Supreme Court justice. She is an umpire who calls the balls and the strikes as they are. It is silly to suggest that she is pro-bat or pro-ball, pro-batter or pro-pitcher.

Let's speak truth to power.

The main reason Justice Owen is being opposed, is not that personal views are being falsely ascribed to her, they are, but rather because she is a woman in public life who is believed to have personal views that some maintain are unacceptable for a woman in public life to have.

Such penalization is a matter of the greatest concern to me because it represents a new glass ceiling for women jurists just as they approach the tables of our high courts after long-struggling careers. Such treatment will have a chilling effect on women jurists that will keep them from weighing in on exactly the sorts of cases that most invite their participation and their perspectives as women.

On abortion, the truth is that, rather than being an activist foe of Roe, Justice Owen repeatedly cites and follows Roe and its progeny as authority.

Moreover, her opponents portray her as a pro-life activist, when all she has ever done is rule on a parental involvement law, popular with over 80 percent of the American people. The bottom line is that they are blinded to anyone who will not abide by abortion on demand even for little girls, without parents ever knowing.

I hope my colleagues will treat Justice Owen fairly when the vote comes. As they say back home in Utah, I hope they will choose the right.

But I warn them, the American people will hear of the result, and I warn them also, a sword of Damocles will hang over the Senate and the future of the Judiciary Committee when that vote comes.

THE HONORABLE JESSE BROWN

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I was deeply saddened to learn of the untimely death of Jesse Brown on August 15, 2002. I was aware of Jesse's struggle with Lou Gehrig's disease, and know that friends, veterans and government officials across the Nation had Jesse and his family in their thoughts and prayers.

Jesse was an individual for whom I had the highest regard. He was truly a distinguished American who not only made considerable sacrifices for his country as a Marine in Vietnam, but continued to serve our country, especially the veterans of our Nation through his service as Executive Director of the Disabled American Veterans and later as Secretary of Veterans Affairs for 5 years in the cabinet of President Clinton.

It was during his tenure as VA Secretary that I worked more closely with Jesse and had the opportunity to learn of his commitment to our nation's veterans particularly to improve the medical care services to veterans. During a visit to the community of Grafton, ND for the dedication of an outpatient clinic, I had the opportunity to see first hand Jesse's concern and compassion for our veterans and their families. I was particularly impressed with his commitment to make certain that our veterans living in the rural and more remote areas of our country had the resources and access to the best VA medical care possible.

Jesse Brown represents the very best of America, he was a U.S. Marine with a distinguished service record in Vietnam, a disabled veteran, a devoted family member, a distinguished public servant, and an individual that represented the very best qualities and character in America. He is a role model for the coming generations and for us all. I hope our younger Americans will have an opportunity to know Jesse over time, to learn of his sacrifices and accomplishments on behalf of all Americans. Jesse deserves our highest respect and admiration.

My prayers and thoughts are with the Brown family members at this time.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred Aug. 3, 1997 in Fort Worth, TX. Two gay men were physically assaulted after leaving a gay bar. The assailants, two men, were heard to yell anti-gay epithets during the attack.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

TRIBUTE TO ANGELA MARSHALL- HOFMANN

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I rise today to thank Angela Marshall-Hofmann, who has worked on my staff for more than a decade.

I first met Angela in 1990. She was a reporter for the school newspaper at Eastern Montana College during her freshman year. Angela met me at the Billings airport to do an interview, and after the interview was over, she indicated she would like to be an intern in my Billings office.

I told her to come in—and she did such a great job that when a part-time position opened up, we hired her. She continued to work in the Billings office until she graduated from college.

During her time in the Billings office, Angela began to develop an interest in trade issues. She worked on setting up a state visit by several Ambassadors, and helped draft an export manual for Montana's small businesses.

During her senior year of college, she was encouraged to apply for the Rotary Club's International Scholarship. There is always a talented pool of students in Montana that applies for that prestigious scholarship—and Angela won it. She used it to study in France for a year, and continued to focus on international trade.

When she came back from France she went to law school in Missoula and began work in our Missoula office. During her time there she got involved with the Mansfield Center and helped to plan their international conferences, including one in China.

In 1997, Angela finally came east to work in our Washington, DC office, with a portfolio that included both agriculture and trade issues. During that time, she organized and traveled on trade missions to Asia and to South America.

Angela has always been one of the best multitaskers I know. When she worked in the Missoula office, she was going to law school and teaching dance classes—and doing great at all three.

These days, I think she has taken multitasking to a new level. With twin babies Marshall and Stephen at home and all of her responsibilities at work, she still manages to thrive.

And not only does Angela thrive, she does so with a positive attitude that makes her one of the most pleasant people to work with. I doubt there is anyone who has a bad thing to say about her. And after all her years on Capitol Hill—that is really saying something.

I was perhaps most proud of Angela, however, when she was asked this year to be the commencement speaker at Montana State University in Billings—formerly Eastern. She spoke as one of MSU's most distinguished alumni. I believe she inspired the graduating students to achieve and accomplish many great things—as Angela has.

Angela has truly done it all—from intern, part-time staffer, and receptionist, to legislative assistant, and now international trade counsel to the Senate Finance Committee. She has worked on issues that are vital to Montana, including softwood lumber an agriculture. She has helped pass historic legislation, including Permanent Normal Trade Relations for China and this year's Trade Act.

Angela—thank you for your years of hard work, for your dedication to the State of Montana, and for the service to your country. You will truly be missed.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE CENTEN- NIAL OF BIG BASIN REDWOODS STATE PARK

• Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to recognize the 100th anniversary of the creation of California's oldest State park, Big Basin Redwoods State Park, located 25 miles northwest of Santa Cruz. Big Basin holds the distinction of being home to the largest continuous stand of Ancient Coast Redwoods south of San Francisco.

Big Basin Redwoods State Park was the first of California's 269 State parks to be set aside by the State legislature in September, 1902. Its creation was the result of a turn of the century community organizing campaign. San Jose photographer Andrew P. Hill gathered a group of writers, educators and women's club members for an exploratory expedition to the Santa Cruz Mountains, the area we know today as Big Basin. They formed the Sempervirens Club and began lobbying for preservation of the area as a public park. Their intention was to save these trees for posterity.

Today we celebrate the foresight and dedication of Andrew P. Hill and his friends. Big Basin Redwoods State Park is seen as the birthplace of the movement to save California's coastal redwoods and the birthplace of the entire State park system.

This system contains magnificent diversity and beauty ranging from the majestic forests of Northern California to the sun-baked deserts of Southern California and from the vibrant blue surf of the Pacific shoreline to the glorious peaks of the Sierra Nevada Mountain Range. It includes cultural and historical sites of national importance, wildlife habitats and natural preserves that are critical to the ecological health of thousands of plants and animals and a vast array of recreational opportunities for all citizens.

Big Basin Redwoods State Park incorporates 18,000 acres of old growth and recovering redwood forest, mixed with conifer, oaks, chaparral and riparian habitats. The park encompasses 80 miles of trails that include numerous waterfalls, lush canyons and chaparral-covered slopes. Other features of the park are family and group camping facilities, tent cabins, backpacking camps, hiking, mountain biking and equestrian trails.

On the 100th anniversary of the founding of Big Basin Redwoods State Park by the California legislature, I wish to recognize it as an enduring and unique place of historical and environmental importance. Today we celebrate the spirit and determination of a group of people that resulted in the preservation of a beautiful primeval forest that we enjoy today.●

TRIBUTE TO SAMUEL "SKIP" KEESAL, JR.

• Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I pay tribute to a great Californian, Samuel "Skip" Keesal, Jr. Skip will be honored by Leadership Long Beach with its prestigious Excellence in Leadership Award on October 3, 2002.

"Excellence in Leadership" aptly describes Skip Keesal and his long and distinguished career. Since founding the law firm of Keesal, Young and Logan in 1970, he has tried more than 250 cases, has been named a "Best Lawyer in America" for both his civil and maritime work, and was invited to join the distinguished International Academy of Trial Lawyers. The awards and acknowledgments he has won are too numerous to fully review and place him among the most honored lawyers in America. Indeed, Skip's career is worthy of an award for "Excellence in Leadership."

Skip Keesal could easily win a second "Excellence in Leadership" award for his exemplary community work. He serves on the boards of directors for many community organizations that serve children, provide community healthcare and educate young people. His work has helped the City of Long Beach prosper and its residents to live better, healthier lives.

Skip and his wife, Beth, have three adult children. I know all will join Skip in celebrating this award. I congratulate Skip Keesal and encourage him to keep up his very good work.●

INLAND AGENCY'S 33D ANNIVERSARY

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, on October 12, 2002, the Inland Agency will celebrate 33 years of outstanding service to Riverside, San Bernardino, Inyo and Mono Counties. I would like to take a moment to acquaint my colleagues with this organization's exceptional record of service to the community.

Since 1969, Inland Agency has provided a wealth of programs and services for the community's diverse populations. It serves more than 132,000 individuals through its health, youth violence prevention and community strengthening programs.

In the area of health care, the agency has a caregivers' program, a health insurance counseling program geared toward seniors, and a program called the Desert Sierra Breast Cancer Partnership that has provided education and free breast cancer screenings to thousands of people.

In efforts to reduce youth violence and make sure children are led in the right direction, Inland Agency provides education, violence prevention training for children and their parents, and administers after-school programs so that students have a safe, nurturing place to go after the school bell rings. I am proud to note that the Community Peace Program, through its education to thousands of children this year, has helped reduce crime in the community. In addition, the agency takes a step further with its Project YES program, which strengthens children's academic and leadership abilities so they can be well prepared for a bright future ahead.

Not only does the Inland Agency reach out to individuals, but it also seeks to make a difference in the communities it serves. Through its Community Tool Box program in Adelanto, the agency gives community members the tools they need to strengthen and improve their neighborhoods and make them better places to live.

It is clear that Inland Agency exemplifies the best in American community spirit in all it does. I extend my very best wishes to each staff member and volunteer for improving the quality of life for thousands of people, and I wish them all many more years of continued success.●

IN MEMORIAM: DANIEL LEE

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to share with the Senate the memory of one of my constituents, Daniel Lee, who lost his life on September 11, 2001. Mr. Lee was 34 years old when the plane he was on, American Airlines Flight 11, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed into the World Trade Center, killing everyone on board.

Daniel Lee grew up in Palm Desert, CA. He was a carpenter and a drummer in a local southern California band. He met his wife, Kellie, in 1991 at a rock concert in which he was playing the drums. They were married October 7, 1995 and their first child, Amanda Beth, was born December 11, 1998.

Mr. Lee was a dedicated and successful set carpenter in the music industry, known to work 20 hour days when necessary. He worked with many talented musicians including Neil Diamond, Barbra Streisand, N'Sync, Aerosmith and Yanni. He was touring with the Backstreet Boys when, on September 11, 2001, he left to fly home to be with his wife as she was about to give birth to their second child. Allison Danielle Lee was born September 13, 2001.

Kellie Lee recalls Dan's bright, relaxed and charming smile. "He was caring, loving, funny and romantic. He loved being a dad and was so excited about having another child on the way," she says. One of his special joys was getting friends together for barbecues and pool parties," Kellie remembers.

Dan Lee is survived by his wife, Kellie Lee, his daughters, Amanda and Allison, mother and stepfather Elaine and John Sussino, brothers Jack Fleishman and Stuart Lee and sister, Randi Kaye.

None of us is untouched by the terror of September 11, and many Californians were part of each tragic moment of that tragic day. Some were trapped in the World Trade Center towers. Some were at work in the Pentagon. And the fates of some were sealed as they boarded planes bound for San Francisco or Los Angeles.

I offer today this tribute to one of 51 Californians who perished on that awful morning. I want to assure the family of Daniel Lee, and the families of all the victims, that their fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, aunts, uncles, brothers and sisters will not be forgotten.●

SOUTH DAKOTA DEVELOPMENTAL CENTER CELEBRATES 100 YEARS OF SERVICE

● Mr. JOHNSON. Madam President, it is with great honor that I rise today to congratulate the South Dakota Developmental Center, SDDC, for its 100 years of service.

The SDDC was established in 1899 by the South Dakota State Legislature as the Northern Hospital for the Insane. The Center accepted its first admissions in 1902 to meet the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities for the State of South Dakota. One Hundred years later, the Center continues to serve South Dakota and the needs of its citizens.

Over the last century, the South Dakota Developmental Center in Redfield, SD has provided quality services to individuals with developmental disabilities who do not have the option of receiving care from a community-based center. To meet the needs of its patients, services are provided by specialists from many areas of health care, including Audiology, Optometry, Chemical Dependency Counseling, Dentistry, Nutrition, Teaching, Physical Therapy, Pharmacy, Nursing, Psychiatry, Speech Pathology, Vocational Instruction, Mental Health Therapy, and Occupational Therapy. These staff members enable the SDDC to meet the needs of its diverse population, and help them reach their ultimate goal, a higher level of independence.

This year also marks 100 years of partnership between the local community and the SDDC. Currently, the SDDC employs more than 400 staff, making them a major employer in the Redfield area. The impact of SDDC on the local economy cannot be overstated. The SDDC not only provides quality jobs to more than 400 individuals, but indirectly helps sustain numerous community businesses, organizations, and public services.

I am pleased to announce that the South Dakota Development Center is planning a centennial celebration on September 20, 2002. The centennial celebration includes a rededication of several buildings on campus, an award ceremony, a luncheon, special afternoon activities, and an evening social at the local VFW for returning former employees, dignitaries, special guests and friends.

I am proud to have this opportunity to honor the South Dakota Development Center for its 100 years of outstanding service. It is an honor for me to share with my colleagues the exemplary leadership and strong commitment to individuals with developmental disabilities that the South Dakota Development Center has provided. I strongly commend their years of hard work and dedication, and I am very pleased that their substantial efforts are being publicly honored and celebrated.●

TRIBUTE TO NORMAN TATE: DELAWARE'S FIREMAN OF THE YEAR

• Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, over the past year, our Nation has endured heartbreak and celebrated heroes, especially the members of the fire service who, in a very profound sense, became the face of America on that fateful day last September.

In my State of Delaware, we celebrate a very special hero of our fire service, Norman Tate, who has been chosen as the 2002 Delaware Volunteer Fireman's Association Fireman of the Year.

The truth is, Norm Tate has earned this award—and could have received it deservedly—in any number of years. He has been a firefighter with the Seaford Volunteer Fire Department since 1959, and now holds Life Member status. He has served in, literally, every administrative office of his department, and on the ambulance squad; he has twice been named Seaford's Fireman of the Year—the only member ever, in a century-long history, to receive the award more than once, and again, he could have received it, and deserved it, just about any year.

Norm has also been the Fireman of the Year for Sussex County and for the Delmarva Volunteer Fireman's Association, and was instrumental in setting up the Delaware Volunteer Fireman's Association, DVFA, State Conference. He did the hard organizational and persuasive work of committee chairman, and has been honored with the title of President Emeritus of DVFA.

Beyond the fire service, Norm Tate has been a leader in the Seaford Lions Club, and received the Lion of the Year Award. He also received the "Voice of the Blue Jays" award for outstanding service to the Seaford School District, and the Distinguished Service Award from the City of Seaford.

In short, Norman Tate defines citizen-leadership. He is the extraordinary ordinary American who becomes a hero, not by ambition but in response to the needs of his community and his country. He has a deep sense of responsibility, as well as pride, arising from his citizenship; he looks for opportunities to help; he undertakes service as a privilege.

Norm Tate is being honored as Delaware's Volunteer Fireman of the Year, as his beloved Seaford Volunteer Fire Department celebrates 100 years of service to the community. There could not be—at Seaford or in any fire company a more appropriate honoree in such a meaningful anniversary year.

Norm Tate is, quite simply, the best, and as the fellow citizens he has served so well, we in Delaware are proud to honor him; as his friend, I am privileged to know him, and blessed by the influence of his generous and gracious spirit.●

MOREHOUSE SCHOOL OF MEDICINE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

• Mr. CLELAND. Madam President, 27 years ago the National Medical Association and other prominent organizations endorsed the development of the Medical School at Morehouse College in Atlanta, GA. This came in light of studies that revealed, first, a severe shortage of African-American and other minority physicians in the United States, particularly in Georgia, and, second, that African-Americans suffered disproportionately from major diseases. Since its inception, Morehouse School of Medicine has worked to help solve our Nation's healthcare crisis by graduating top-quality physicians who dedicate themselves to serving the more than 32 million people in this country who live in medically neglected communities. Seventy percent of Morehouse School of Medicine graduates practice in underserved communities.

The entering M.D. class has grown from 24 students in 1978 to its current 44. Each year, more than 20,000 Georgians who are disadvantaged are served by approximately 30 community health promotion projects sponsored by Morehouse School of Medicine. These projects include prevention initiatives associated with substance abuse, teen pregnancy, geriatric services, cancer, lead poisoning, and violence prevention. In addition, Morehouse School of Medicine faculty provides about 75,000 patient encounters per year in community clinics throughout metropolitan Atlanta. The student body of Morehouse School of Medicine continues to excel. For the past few years, 100 percent of the school's family medicine residents have passed their board exams in their first sitting.

These accomplishments grow out of strong leadership, beginning with the vision of Dr. Hugh M. Gloster of Morehouse College and Morehouse School of Medicine's founding dean and first president, Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, and continuing with Dr. James R. Gavin, the current president. Since its inception in 1975, Morehouse School of Medicine has established a four-year medical education program, a master of public health program, a Ph.D. program in the biomedical sciences, seven residency programs, and several centers of excellence. These centers include the Neuroscience Institute, the Cardiovascular Research Institute, and the NASA/Space Medicine and Life Science Research Center, the first of its kind at a minority medical institution.

Today we celebrate the new home of one of those centers of excellence, the National Center for Primary Care. This state-of-the-art facility will house an exceptional team of administrators, educators, and researchers devoted to eliminating health disparities in this country.

Georgia should, indeed, be grateful for this new jewel in our crown. Under the guidance of former Surgeon General David Satcher, Director of the National Center for Primary Care, this healthcare think tank is poised to educate and illuminate for decades to come.●

ON THE DEDICATION OF THE YSMAEL R. VILLEGAS MIDDLE SCHOOL, RIVERSIDE, CALI- FORNIA

• Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, on September 6, the new Ysmael R. Villegas Middle School will be dedicated in Riverside, CA. This day will hold a particularly special meaning for the people of Riverside, as this new school is named for one of the community's most distinguished military heroes, Staff Sgt. Ysmael R. Villegas, an Hispanic-American killed in the line of duty during World War II. He died only one day before his 21st birthday and received the Congressional Medal of Honor for his bravery.

Sergeant Villegas, a resident of Casa Blanca in the Riverside community, received the prestigious Congressional Medal of Honor for his valiant bravery while defending our country in the Philippines. His citation, in part, reads:

He moved boldly from man to man, in the face of bursting grenades and demolition charges, through heavy machinegun and rifle fire, to bolster the spirit of his comrades. As he neared his goal, he was hit and killed by enemy fire. Through his heroism and indomitable fighting spirit, Staff Sergeant Villegas, at the cost of his life, inspired his men to a determined attack in which they swept the enemy from the field.

It is clear from these words that Sergeant Villegas was truly a great American war hero. The people of Riverside have every reason to memorialize him and I am pleased that the Alvord Unified School District will give him this lasting legacy.

As the Alvord Unified School District and the City of Riverside celebrate the dedication of the Ysmael R. Villegas Middle School, I extend my best wishes to all those who made this important day possible. As students enter the classrooms of this institution, they can hold their heads high knowing that their school bears the name of such a wonderful model of courage, dignity and integrity.●

CONGRATULATING THE STATE OF OHIO ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OF- FICE

• Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, I rise today on behalf of the people of the State of Ohio to congratulate Ohio Attorney General Betty Montgomery and her staff for being selected to receive the 2002 American Bar Association, ABA, Pro Bono Publico Award.

In May 2000, Betty Montgomery unveiled an office-wide Pro Bono Initiative to provide legal assistance for low-income seniors and hospice patients across Ohio. Through this program, participating staff attorneys offer their time and talents to provide legal assistance to those who can't afford it. Once training is completed, attorneys are allowed to provide their services at no charge for up to 40 hours a year. Services provided by assistant attorneys general include wills, general powers of attorney, durable powers of attorney for health care, and other "end-of-life" legal issues.

Since the program's inception, 125 assistant attorneys general, 20 paralegals, and 15 secretaries have answered the call to help underserved Ohioans handle their legal matters. To date, the office has served 625 clients by providing them with 1,235 healthcare powers of attorney, living wills, powers of attorney, and wills.

This year, the Attorney General's office is one of five recipients of the ABA Pro Bono Publico Awards. The Pro Bono Publico Awards were established by the ABA in 1984 and are presented annually by the ABA Standing Committee on Pro Bono and Public Service to recognize lawyers, law firms and corporate law departments for extraordinarily noteworthy contributions in extending legal services to the poor and disadvantaged.

This is not the first time that the Attorney General's office has been honored for these services. In 2001, the Columbia Bar Foundation and Association recognized the program with its award for Outstanding Pro Bono Service by a Governmental Agency. In addition, the Ohio Legal assistance Foundation and the Ohio Bar Association presented the Attorney General's office with the 2001 Presidential Award for Pro Bono Service.

I am proud to have worked with my friend, Betty Montgomery, when I was Governor of Ohio. Her unwavering commitment to serving the people of Ohio through pro bono services is vital towards maintaining a justice system that is meaningful to all segments of society. This program serves as a testament to our founding fathers' belief in a system of equal justice for all.

I believe that every lawyer has an ethical and professional obligation to provide pro bono services. It is my hope that this sets a challenge for lawyers statewide and sends the message that participating in pro bono programs is an ideal that is embraced by leaders in the legal community. Betty Montgomery has certainly led the way in this endeavor. I am proud of her accomplishment and I congratulate Attorney General Montgomery and her staff on their dedication to providing pro bono services to all of Ohio's citizens.●

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-279. A resolution adopted by the House of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative to designating the September 11, 2001, United Airlines Flight 93 crash site in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, as a National Historic Battlefield; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 455

Whereas, The 40 innocent civilian passengers and crew of United Airlines Flight 93 were viciously attacked by hostile foreign terrorists; and

Whereas, Suicide hijackers used the airliner as an instrument of terror and mass destruction against the people and property of the United States; and

Whereas, Certain passengers and crew, after communicating with loved ones and authorities on the ground, heroically resisted the terrorists in an effort to regain control of United Airlines Flight 93; and

Whereas, The insurrection by these innocents and their ultimate sacrifice preempted further catastrophic destruction and loss of life on September 11, 2001; and

Whereas, Pennsylvania soil was again consecrated that day as our nation entered the war against terrorism; therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania petition the Congress of the United States to enact legislation designating the September 11, 2001, United Airlines Flight 93 crash site in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, as a National Historic Battlefield; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers of each House of Congress, to the members of Congress from Pennsylvania and to Governor Mark S. Schweiker.

POM-280. A resolution adopted by the House of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative to Yucca Mountain, Nevada; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 454

Whereas, In order to secure a safe and prosperous future for its citizens, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania must maintain a broad portfolio of energy supply options to hedge against fuel price fluctuations, fuel shortages and import disruptions; and

Whereas, Pennsylvania's nine nuclear power reactors have proven to be reliable sources of electricity to Pennsylvania citizens and businesses, producing 36% of the electricity generated in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

Whereas, Nuclear power prevents the release of millions of tons of air pollutants and greenhouse gasses, thus being critical for compliance with air quality laws and regulations; and

Whereas, Congress enacted the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 and directed the Department of Energy to establish a program for the management of the nation's high-level waste, including used nuclear fuel, and for its permanent disposal in a deep geologic repository; and

Whereas, More than $7 billion has been spent on scientific testing and studies of Yucca-Mountain, Nevada, showing that the proposed site is an ideal repository to safely contain the nation's used nuclear fuel, with a capacity sufficient to meet all foreseeable storage needs; and

Whereas, Studies of Yucca Mountain have yielded the scientific information necessary for a decision by the United States Secretary of Energy that there are no technical or scientific issues to prevent Yucca Mountain from serving as a permanent repository and clearly support the recommendation by the Secretary to the President of the United States to proceed on licensing a permanent repository at Yucca Mountain; and

Whereas, Since 1983, consumers of electricity from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania have committed nearly $1.5 billion to the Federal Nuclear Waste Fund to finance site assessment and nuclear waste management; therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania urge Congress to sustain the President's affirmative decision on Yucca Mountain's suitability as a permanent Federal repository for used nuclear fuel; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President and Vice President of the United States, to be Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania and to the United States Secretary of Energy.

POM-281. A resolution adopted by the East Hampton Town Board, East Hampton, New York Relative to Millstone II nuclear power facility in Connecticut; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-282. A resolution adopted by the Town Board of New Castle, New York relative to Indian Point Nuclear Power Station; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-283. A resolution adopted by the Town Board of New Castle, New York relative to converting Indian Points II and III from nuclear energy to natural gas or other non-nuclear fuel; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-284. A resolution adopted by the Town Board of New Castle, New York relative to Indian Point Power Station; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-285. A Senate joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee relative to the Y-12 National Security Complex in Oak Ridge, Tennessee; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Whereas, the Y-12 National Security Complex in Oak Ridge, Tennessee is a highly valuable resource to this state and the nation, performing work of a delicate nature with extreme precision and employing uniquely skilled and dedicated professionals who have committed themselves to important national security and scientific endeavors; and

Whereas, the Y-12 Plant, in conjunction with the Oak Ridge National Laboratory and other federal facilities in Oak Ridge, has developed into an economic development engine, spinning off new businesses and serving as a testing ground for new technologies; and

Whereas, the Work for Others Program has brought many federal contracts to Oak Ridge, allowing Y-12 employees to update and hone their skills while producing materials for the U.S. Department of Defense and the U.S. Navy, among others; and

Whereas, the nation's nuclear defense policy is dependent upon Y-12's ability to safely and securely maintain the stockpile of nuclear materials and to preserve the now fragile capabilities of the plant; and

Whereas, Y-12 employees have skills in the safe management and handling of nuclear materials that are unduplicated anywhere in the world; these skills have been gained over long periods of employment and training and must be passed on to a new generation of highly educated and skilled workers; and

Whereas, while the site managers have been able to restart many operations that had previously been suspended, the continued safe disarmament and storage of weapons being removed from the national nuclear stockpile depend upon Y-12's revitalization; and

Whereas, many of the facilities at the plant were built during the development of the Manhattan Project, and much of the equipment is more expensive to maintain than operate; the employees of the 21st century require advanced machinery; and

Whereas, modernizing facilities and equipment will better equip the plant's employees to meet and adjust to the demands of the 21st century and the U.S. Department of Energy, to attract more and different kinds of private-sector work, and to support and encourage new, private-sector economic development and scientific advancement; and

Whereas, the safety of Y-12's employees and the environmental security of the region depend on Y-12's having facilities that meet the current safety requirements of the federal government; Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the One Hundred Second General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, the House of Representatives Concurring, That this General Assembly hereby urges the United States Congress and the President of the United States to fully fund the facilities modernization of the Y-12 Plant in the Fiscal Year 2003 federal budget; and be it further

Resolved, That enrolled copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Honorable George W. Bush, President of the United States of America; the President and the Secretary of the United States Senate; the Speaker and the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives; and to each member of Tennessee's Congressional Delegation.

POM-286. A joint resolution adopted by the Assembly of the State of California relative to social health maintenance organizations; to the Committee on Finance.

ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 27

Whereas, Government spending for nursing homes, home health care, and prescription drugs is rising at a rate of almost 10 percent a year, faster than the overall medical health care inflation rate of 4.3 percent for November 2000; and

Whereas, the growth of long-term care expenditures, estimated at 2.6 percent nationally on an annual basis coupled with the growing number of older Americans, will significantly increase costs to the nation's Medicaid and Medicare programs; and

Whereas, innovative and cost-effective models of care are needed to address the needs of aging Americans; and

Whereas, in the federal Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Congress mandated the social health maintenance organization (social HMO) demonstration, which has since benefited over 125,000 individuals; and

Whereas, the social HMO demonstration has been reinforced and expanded by Congress in 1987, 1990, 1993, 1997, and 1999; and

Whereas, the social HMO is a community-based approach to integrating acute and long-term care for older Americans; and

Whereas, the primary purpose of the social HMO is to finance, provide, and coordinate additional services as an extension of benefits covered by Medicare and Medicaid, thereby helping frail seniors live safely in their own homes and avoid costly skilled nursing home placement; and

Whereas, the social HMO targets individuals at risk for nursing home placement and chronic illnesses; and

Whereas, the social HMO supplements the standard benefits required of Medicare+Choice with essential benefits, including geriatric-specific case management, adult day care, personal care, homemaker services, nutrition support, and medication management; and

Whereas, sixty-eight percent of nursing home costs are financed by Medicaid, avoiding or delaying longer nursing home stays and directly saving federal and state funds, by reducing Medicaid nursing home expenditures; and

Whereas, California has 3.3 million residents aged 65 years and older, and is home to the largest elderly population in the country; and

Whereas, the number of California aged 60 years and older is projected to grow 154 percent over the next 40 years; and

Whereas, the fastest growing population group in California is aged 85 years and older; and

Whereas, only one social HMO exists in California, serving over 48,000 seniors, of which 10,300 are eligible for nursing home placement; and

Whereas, the Senior Care Action Network (SCAN), the only social HMO in California, has been able to maintain these skilled nursing home-certifiable seniors in their own homes by providing home and community-based programs and services; and

Whereas, SCAN members are 53 percent less likely than their counterparts in other health care programs to have a long nursing home stay; and

Whereas, SCAN offers financial savings and security to older adults, their families, and taxpayers by alleviating anxiety about exhausting personal savings for long-term care by providing a benefit package that includes in-home services; and

Whereas, the permanency of the social HMO as a benefit option under the Medicare+Choice program will allow organizations like SCAN to provide comprehensive services to seniors anywhere in the nation; and

Whereas, the social HMO will serve as a national model of cost-effective care that provides older Americans with greater health, independence, and dignity; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby urges the President and Congress of the United States, the federal Department of Health and Human Services, and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services to do all of the following:

(a) Affirm the intent of the social HMO program to provide services for frail and chronically ill seniors.

(b) Fully support the transition of the social HMO demonstration into a permanent benefit option as part of Medicare+Choice.

(c) Include Medicaid beneficiaries in the social HMO Medicare+Choice option.

(d) Allow the social HMO option to offer comprehensive services in addition to fundamental Medicare benefits.

(e) Approve and support a payment methodology needed for the advanced care for the nation's frail and chronically ill elderly; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the United States Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States.

POM-287. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to asbestos; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE RESOLUTION No. 58

Whereas, asbestos, a mineral processed and used in thousands of construction and consumer products, is a dangerous substance and has caused thousands of people to develop serious and often fatal diseases and cancers; and

Whereas, millions of workers have been exposed to asbestos, and the economic toll resulting from litigation related to exposure to asbestos could run into the hundreds of billions of dollars; and

Whereas, many companies, in order to avoid bankruptcy and to compensate victims with manifest injuries, have attempted to set aside sufficient resources to compensate the victims with manifest injuries from exposure to asbestos; and

Whereas, the new claims brought are resulting in a depletion of the funds available to compensate those victims who have manifested serious injuries and who are in desperate need of compensation; and

Whereas, the United States Supreme Court noted in Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 144 L Ed 2d 715, 110 S Ct 2295 (1999) and Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 138 L Ed 2d 117 S Ct 2231 (1997) that federal and state courts have been inundated by an elephantine mass of asbestos cases that defies customary judicial administration and calls for national legislation; and

Whereas, as the United States Supreme Court noted in Amchem, the United States Judicial Conference Ad Hoc Committee on Asbestos Litigation in its report of March, 1991 specifically concluded that real reform to the asbestos-litigation problem required federal legislation creating a national asbestos dispute-resolution scheme and, as recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee, the Judicial Conference of the United States urged Congress to act: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the United States Congress to enact legislation to ensure that deserving victims of asbestos exposure receive compensation for their injuries; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America and to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation.

POM-288. A resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to constructing a long range economic development for Louisiana focused on the utility, communications, and transportation; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 62

Whereas, the recently completed 2002 First Extraordinary Session of the legislature focused on various improvements to spur economic development in Louisiana; and

Whereas, the special session successfully integrated the state's economic development blueprint, Vision: 2020, with the recent reorganization of the Department of Economic Development; and

Whereas, despite the many accomplishments of the special session, there remain many areas that should be examined to ensure continued economic development in the state; and

Whereas, there has been demonstrated a need to construct a long range, strategic plan for future economic development of the utility communication, and transportation industry in Louisiana; and

Whereas, it is necessary to blend this long range, strategic plan for future economic development of the utility, communication, and transportation industry into the state's overall economic development plan, Vision:

2020, along with federal initiatives in this area; and

Whereas, in order to accomplish this significant goal, it will be necessary to convene a summit meeting of the governor, the Louisiana congressional delegation, the president of the Senate, the speaker of the House of Representatives, the members of the Public Service Commission, and the secretary of the Department of Economic Development to coordinate a strategic plan for future economic development of the utility, communication, and transportation industry in Louisiana.

Therefore, be it resolved, That the Senate of Legislature of Louisiana hereby urges and requests the governor, the Louisiana congressional delegation, the president of the Senate, the speaker of the House of Representatives, the members of the Public Service Commission, and the secretary of the Department of Economic Development to convene a summit meeting to discuss a long range, strategic plan for future economic development of the utility, communication, and transportation industry in Louisiana.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the governor, the Louisiana congressional delegation, the president of the Senate, the speaker of the House of Representatives, the members of the Public Service Commission, and the secretary of the Department of Economic Department.

POM-289. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative to the Delaware River Channel Deepening Project; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, The Delaware River has, since the inception of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, been a vital artery of commerce and trade; and

Whereas, It is the longstanding policy of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to encourage waterborne commerce and to support the development and competitiveness of the Port of Philadelphia; and

Whereas, It is essential that the Delaware River navigation channel be deepened to 45 feet in order to accommodate larger steamship vessels and future growth; and

Whereas, The United States Government, acting through the Congress of the United States and the Army Corps of Engineers, has authorized a public works project that will deepen the navigation channel of the Delaware River to 45 feet; and

Whereas, The Delaware River Channel Deepening Project is enthusiastically supported by every organization and labor union whose livelihood depends on a healthy and vibrant seaport; and

Whereas, It is essential that this extraordinarily important public works project proceed without interruption; Therefore be it

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring), That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania reaffirm its support for the Delaware River Channel Deepening Project and urge the Congress and the Army Corps of Engineers to take all necessary steps to assure its successful and prompt completion; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers of each house of Congress and to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania.

POM-290. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative natural gas; to the Committee on Finance.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, In 1979 total United States energy consumption increased steadily from the end of World War II, reaching 81 quadrillion Btu's (quads); and

Whereas, After the oil shocks of the 1970s, energy consumption declined to 73 quads by 1983; and

Whereas, Reasonably priced natural gas and other forms of energy played a crucial role in expanding our economy and will be critical for future economic growth; and

Whereas, The Gas Technology Institute (GTI) projects total energy demand growing to 118 quads annually during the next 15 years; and

Whereas, Natural gas currently provides approximately 23% of our nation's energy needs; and

Whereas, Gas use must increase continually to meet an expanding economy; and

Whereas, Increased use of natural gas can decrease our dependence on foreign energy, mitigate greenhouse emissions, improve our economy and provide consumers with a better quality of life; and

Whereas, Nonconventional gas resources currently provide about 26% of gas production in the United States; and

Whereas, Nonconventional resources such as tight gas sands, coalbed methane and Devonian shale, are technologically challenging and require support for economic production; and

Whereas, Although the country holds a large natural gas resource base, natural gas is being limited in its use by Federal and State regulations; and

Whereas, There are large resources of undeveloped nonconventional gas resources that remain too difficult to develop and will only be produced with ongoing incentives; and

Whereas, The current tax credit for producing fuel from a nonconventional source under section 29 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 will expire in 2002; and

Whereas, This expiration will disrupt the ongoing progress in developing nonconventional gas resources at a time when the gas consumer, United States economy and our environment need these resources most; and

Whereas, The only short-term solution that reduces costs and avoids switching to less desirable energy resources is to increase the natural gas supply; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania urge Congress to take all the necessary steps to extend the tax credit under section 29 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to continue to provide for a reliable, fair-priced supply of natural gas to United States gas consumers; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the presiding officer of each house of Congress, to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania, to the Finance Committee of the United States Senate and to the Ways and Means Committee of the United States House of Representatives.

POM-291. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative to the Fair Credit Reporting Act; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, Identity theft is the fastest-growing crime in the United States, expanding at a rate of 50% per year; and

Whereas, Every 79 seconds an identity is stolen; and

Whereas, Approximately one out of every five Americans or a member of the family has been victimized by identity theft; and

Whereas, Every year more than 400,000 Americans are robbed of their identities and suffer losses of more than $2 billion; and

Whereas, More than 1,000 people a day in the United States fall victim to crimes of stolen identity; and

Whereas, Victims spend anywhere from six months to two years recovering from identity theft; and

Whereas, On average, victims spend 175 hours and $808 in out-of-pocket expenses to clear their names; and

Whereas, Experts report that most victims do not realize that a theft has occurred for months or years afterward; and

Whereas, To protect consumer privacy, the Congress of the United States enacted the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA); and

Whereas, The FCRA requires all credit reporting agencies to maintain reasonable procedures designed to assure maximum possible accuracy of the information contained in credit reports; and

Whereas, A private right of action allows injured consumers to recover any actual damages caused by negligent violations and both actual and punitive damages for willful noncompliance; and

Whereas, The Supreme Court ruled unanimously in TRW, Inc. v. Andrews that the two-year deadline to sue companies which collect or spread bad information begins when the credit agency reports erroneous information and not when the victim discovers the fraud; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania memorialize Congress to amend the Fair Credit Reporting Act to permit victims of identity theft to bring suit any time within two years of the victim's discovery of the fraud; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of each house of Congress and to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania.

POM-292. A Senate concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to Federal Forest Lands; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 53

Whereas, In recent years, our country has benefited from public policy encouraging the states to assume responsibility for tasks long handled by the federal government. Experts in many fields have come to accept the wisdom of utilizing state expertise and resources to deal with problems that are best addressed locally rather than from Washington, D.C.; and

Whereas, The management of public forest lands is another area that should be turned over to states through a program of block grants, Michigan, with more public forests than any other state in the eastern portion of the country, has compiled an impressive record of success in the management of its resources. The conditions of Michigan's state forest acreage is a model for other parts of the country; and

Whereas, There are several sound reasons why forest management would be more efficiently and productively managed by the state instead of the federal government. State management offers flexibility, rather than a "one size fits all" approach; shorter lines of communication; better communication within local regions; and generally lower overall costs. State control over forest operations in Michigan will more accurately reflect our citizens' historic sense of commitment and investment in this vitally important resource; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to turn over the management of federal lands to the states through a block grant program; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

POM-293. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to the Pledge of Allegiance; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE RESOLUTION No. 241

Whereas, The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled it is unconstitutional to recite the Pledge of Allegiance in a public school; and

Whereas, The Pledge of Allegiance is not an oath or pledge of allegiance to a person, power, or potentate but to the principles that serve as the foundation of a free republic; and

Whereas, The Pledge of Allegiance is not an oath or pledge to any god, deity, or spirit, but rather it recognizes that those who govern do not receive their authority from a monarch. Instead, a god, deity, or spirit has bestowed on every citizen of the United States of America the inherent worth and dignity embodied in and protected by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights of the United States of America; and

Whereas, The Pledge of Allegiance recognizes that we are one nation of diverse and unique peoples within fifty separate states undivided in our dedication to the principles of freedom, liberty, and justice; and

Whereas, The Pledge of Allegiance reiterates the guarantees of liberty and justice mandated by the Bill of Rights; and

Whereas, The flag of the United States of America is a representation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, as well as the free people who willingly sacrificed their lives and their freedoms to protect and preserve those freedoms; and

Whereas, The Pledge of Allegiance teaches students to cherish, preserve, and protect the republic dedicated to the preservation of freedom, liberty, and justice; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That the people of the state of Michigan, acting through the Senate, do hereby call upon the United States Supreme Court to overturn the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision to ban the recital of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the justices of the United States Supreme Court, the President of the United States, and the members of the Congress of the United States.

POM-294. A joint resolution adopted by the Assembly of the State of California relative to pancreatic cancer; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION No. 28

Whereas, Approximately 29,000 new cases of pancreatic cancer were diagnosed nationwide in 2001; and

Whereas, An estimated 28,000 people died from pancreatic cancer during 2001, representing more than 5 percent of all cancer deaths in the United States; and

Whereas, The average life expectancy after diagnosis with metastatic disease is just three to six months; and

Whereas, About 85 percent of pancreatic cancer victims die within a year of diagnosis, and less than 5 percent survive as long as five years; and

Whereas, The 99-percent mortality rate for pancreatic cancer is the highest of any cancer; and

Whereas, Pancreatic cancer ranks as the fourth most common cause of cancer death among men and women; and

Whereas, There is currently no physiological marker or screening test that permits early diagnosis of pancreatic cancer; and

Whereas, Pancreatic cancer is among the most aggressive of all cancers, but study of the disease has attracted comparatively little funding; and

Whereas, According to the National Cancer Institute, pancreatic cancer received approximately $20 million in federal research funding, roughly 7 percent of the funding level per fatality of that of breast cancer; and

Whereas, There is a critical need to support research that identifies new methods of detecting and treating pancreatic cancer; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California urges the President and Congress of the United States to expand federally funded research efforts aimed at developing a reliable means of detecting pancreatic cancer in its early stages, when the disease is more effectively treatable; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the directors of the National Institutes of Health and the National Cancer Institute.

POM-295. A resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire relative to developing a national missile defense system; to the Committee on Armed Services.

HOUSE RESOLUTION No. 21

Whereas, New Hampshire is located in the New England region of the northeastern United States and is populated by over 1,200,000 persons, and maintains distinguished centers of higher learning, and is the site of advanced information and defense technology, and is noted for outstanding natural endowments of forests, mountains, and lakes, and derives considerable electrical power from nuclear energy; and

Whereas, the people of New Hampshire are conscious of the state's assets and favorable future development for their children and future generations; and

Whereas, New Hampshire responded to the call at Bunker Hill with volunteers in the struggle for American independence and has contributed to national defense through its citizenry ever since; and

Whereas, the people of New Hampshire are aware of the global proliferation of ballistic missiles and weapons of mass destruction and their threat to our nation, our allies, and our armed forces abroad; and

Whereas, the United States does not possess a robust and effective defense against ballistic missiles bearing weapons of mass destruction, launched by anyone who opposes American ideals, interests, and influence throughout the world; and

Whereas, New Hampshire, the United States, and the international community are increasingly imperiled by the global proliferation of ballistic missiles and weapons of mass destruction and cannot defend against a hostile or accidental ballistic missiles and weapons of mass destruction and cannot defend against a hostile or accidental ballistic missile attack; in consequence, New Hampshire asserts its leadership as one of 50; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives:

That the New Hampshire house of representatives hereby urges the President of the United States to take all actions necessary, within the limits of the considerable technological prowess of this great union, to protect our nation, our allies, and our armed forces abroad from the threat of missile attack; and

That the New Hampshire house of representatives hereby urges the President to allow the United States the freedom to defend itself, its allies, and its armed forces abroad from ballistic missile attack, treaties and other agreements to the contrary notwithstanding; and

That the New Hampshire house of representatives hereby conveys to the President and Congress that effective national missile defense will require a robust and multi-layered architecture consisting of integrated land-based, sea-based, and/or space-based assets designated to deter future threats whenever possible and meet them whenever necessary; and

That copies of this resolution shall be sent by the house clerk to the New Hampshire congressional delegation, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the President of the United States.

POM-296. A House joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia relative to the Solid Waste Interstate Transportation Act of 2001; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 181

Whereas, recent reports issued by the Department of Environmental Quality reveal that Virginia is currently the second largest importer of municipal solid waste from other states, second only to Pennsylvania, and is currently importing approximately four million tons annually of municipal solid waste from other states; and

Whereas, the amount of municipal solid waste being imported into Virginia is expected to increase in coming years due to the closure of the Fresh Kills Landfill in New York and increased volumes from other states; and

Whereas, the importation of significant amounts of municipal solid waste from other states is prematurely exhausting Virginia's limited landfill capacity; and

Whereas, an increase in the number of garbage trucks on its roads and an increase in the number of garbage barges on its rivers resulting from the importation of significant amounts of municipal solid waste from other states has created many short-term environmental problems for Virginia; and

Whereas, the importation of significant amounts of municipal solid waste from other states also may create serious long-term environmental problems for Virginia; and

Whereas, the importation of significant amounts of municipal solid waste from other states is inconsistent with Virginia's efforts to promote the Commonwealth as a national and international destination for tourism and high-tech economic development; and

Whereas, the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution and the interpretation and application of the Commerce Clause by the United States Supreme Court and other federal courts with respect to interstate solid waste transportation has left Virginia and other states with limited alternatives in regulating, limiting or prohibiting the importation of municipal solid waste; and

Whereas, it is the belief of the General Assembly of Virginia that state and local governments should be given more authority to control the importation of municipal solid waste into their jurisdictions; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates, the Senate concurring: That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact the Solid Waste Interstate Transportation Act of 2001 (HR 1213) incorporating amendments proposed by the Congresswoman representing Virginia's First Congressional District to give local and state governments, including Virginia, additional specific authority to regulate the importation of municipal solid waste into their jurisdictions; and, be it

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House of Delegates transmit copies of this resolution to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the members of the Virginia Congressional Delegation in order that they may be apprised of the sense of the General Assembly of Virginia in this matter.

POM-297. A resolution adopted by the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia to Veterans' Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 18

Whereas, the National Commission on Federal Election Reform suggested in its report to the President the possibility of moving the observance of Veterans Day to the second Tuesday in November in even-numbered years so that elections could be conducted on a national holiday; and

Whereas, Veterans Day, November 11th, formerly called Armistice Day, is the time when Americans unite to recognize the sacrifices and service of past and present members of the United States military; and

Whereas, the holiday was established as Armistice Day in 1926 to commemorate the November 11, 1918, armistice that ended hostilities in World War I; and

Whereas, in 1954 the name of the holiday was changed to Veterans Day to honor all men and women who have served America in its armed forces; and

Whereas, Veterans Day and the ceremonies nationwide to observe it are important to the millions of Americans who take the time each November 11th to honor their fellow citizens who have served their country; and

Whereas, the American Legion, at its 83rd National Convention in August 2001, expressed, by resolution, its opposition to any change of the date for observing Veterans Day; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates, That the President and the Congress of the United States be urged to oppose efforts to move the observance of Veterans Day from November 11th; and, be it

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House of Delegates transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the members of the Virginia Congressional Delegation so that they may be apprised of the sense of the House of Delegates of Virginia in this matter.

POM-298. A resolution adopted by the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia relative to Medicare and oral anti-cancer drugs; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 19

Whereas, cancer is a leading cause of morbidity and mortality in the Commonwealth and throughout the nation; and

Whereas, cancer is disproportionately a disease of the elderly, with more than half of all cancer diagnoses occurring in persons age 65 or older; persons who are often dependent on the federal Medicare program for provision of cancer care; and

Whereas, treatment with anti-cancer drugs is the cornerstone of modern cancer care, and elderly cancer patients must have access to potentially life-extending drug therapy; and

Whereas, the Medicare program's coverage of anti-cancer drugs is limited to injectable drugs or oral drugs that have an injectable version; and

Whereas, the nation's investment in biomedical research has begun to bear fruit with a compelling array of new oral anti-cancer drugs that are less toxic, more effective, and more cost-effective than existing therapies, but, because these drugs do not have an injectable equivalent, they are not covered by Medicare; and

Whereas, the lack of coverage for these important new products leaves many Medicare beneficiaries confronting the choice of either substantial out-of-pocket personal cost or selection of more toxic and less effective treatments that are covered by Medicare; and

Whereas, Medicare's failure to cover oral anti-cancer drugs leaves at risk many beneficiaries suffering from blood-related cancers such as leukemia, lymphoma, and myeloma, as well as cancers of the breast, lung, and prostate; and

Whereas, certain members of the United States Congress have recognized the necessity of Medicare coverage for all oral anti-cancer drugs and have introduced legislation in the 107th Congress to achieve that result (H.R. 1624 and S. 913); now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates, That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact legislation requiring Medicare to cover all oral anti-cancer drugs; and, be it

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House of Delegates transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, the Secretary of the Health and Human Services, the Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, and the members of the Virginia Congressional Delegation so that they may be apprised of the sense of the House of Delegates of Virginia in this matter.

POM-299. A resolution adopted by the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia relative to the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 21

Whereas, the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21), will expire on September 30, 2003; and

Whereas, the six-year federal authorization legislation provides guidelines, budget allocation formulas, and maximum budget limits for transportation spending; and

Whereas, TEA-21 provided for new budget categories to be established for highway and transit spending, effectively establishing a budgetary "firewall" between each of these programs and all other domestic discretionary programs to ensure that transportation trust funds can be used only for transportation spending; and

Whereas, authorizations for federal-aid highway and highway safety construction programs funded from the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund will be increased or decreased whenever the highway firewall amount is adjusted to reflect changed estimates of Highway Account revenue, that is, the budget authority will be aligned with the revenue; and

Whereas, this Revenue, Aligned Budget Authority has resulted in increased federal transportation funding to Virginia since FY 2000; and

Whereas, during the last reauthorization (TEA-21), Virginia was successful in increasing its return on contributions to the federal transportation trust fund from approximately 79 percent to 90.5 percent; and

Whereas, Virginia's current federal return rate of 90.5 percent is the lowest return level from the federal transportation trust fund in the nation; and

Whereas, Virginia taxpayers continue to subsidize other states' transportation programs through Virginia's low rate of return on contributions to the federal transportation trust fund; and

Whereas, the proposed reauthorization of federal aid for surface transportation programs provides an ideal opportunity to ensure that future methods of apportioning federal transportation funds are equitable and fair; and

Whereas, adequate support for the National Highway System (NHS) is necessary to provide consistent mobility and economic benefits for all states throughout the nation, and to ensure that Virginia's citizens are able to connect with other citizens throughout the nation; and

Whereas, adequate support for the National Highway System and other transportation systems in Virginia is equally essential to the numerous and sizable U.S. military bases and other facilities that are located within the Commonwealth, for which an adequate and efficient transportation system is critical to effectively and promptly distribute, supply, and deploy military assets to meet and respond to the imperatives of national defense; and

Whereas, a streamlined transportation program is needed to provide flexible funding to allow states and their local partners to respond to specific state and local needs; and

Whereas, Congress directed the U.S. Department of Transportation in the TEA-21 legislation of 1998 to implement significant environmental regulatory streamlining so that transportation projects could receive federal review and approval in an expedited manner; and

Whereas, the federal review and approval process for transportation projects has not been shortened despite the environmental streamlining mandate of TEA-21; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates. That the Congress of the United States be urged to reauthorize the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century, provide for increased equity in the distribution of federal highway funds to the states, and reduce complexity of and time required for compliance with federal environmental regulations related to highway construction. In reauthorizing the federal surface transportation program, the Congress is also urged to provide fair and equitable distribution of highway funds to states and increase the return to the Commonwealth to at least the national average, ensure that firewalls between the Transportation Trust Fund and other federal spending be maintained, continue Revenue Aligned Budget Authority, and meaningfully streamline federal environmental and other regulations to expedite project review and highway construction; and, be it

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House of Delegates transmit copies of this resolution to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the members of the Virginia Congressional Delegation in order that they may be apprised of the sense of the House of Delegates of Virginia in this matter.

POM-300. A resolution adopted by the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia relative to expanding the use of federal historic preservation tax credits to qualified owner-occupied structures; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 22

Whereas, the Federal Historic Preservation Tax Credit Program currently provides federal income tax incentives for rehabilitation of historic income-producing properties; and

Whereas, legislation currently pending in the United States Congress will expand the program by providing a credit against income tax to individuals who rehabilitate historic homes or who are the first purchasers of rehabilitated historic homes for use as a principal residence; and

Whereas, passage of the pending legislation could have many beneficial effects in Virginia, including encouraging additional protection of historic buildings, returning underutilized buildings to local tax rolls, and providing a boost to efforts to improve older neighborhoods; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates, That the Congress of the United States be urged to expand use of federal historic preservation tax credits to qualified owner-occupied structures; and, be it

Resolved Further, That the Clerk of the House of Delegates transmit copies of this resolution to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the members of the Virginia Congressional Delegation in order that they may be apprised of the sense of the House of Delegates of Virginia in this matter.

POM-301. A House joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Illinois relative to inland waterway transportation; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 54

Whereas, the State of Illinois borders or contains over 1,000 miles of the inland waterway system; and

Whereas, Many of Illinois' locks and dams are more than 60 years old and only 600 feet long, making them unable to accommodate modern barge tows of 1,200 feet long, nearly tripling locking times and causing lengthy delays and ultimately increasing shipping costs; and

Whereas, The use of 1,200-foot locks has been proven nationwide as the best method of improving efficiency, reducing congestion, and modernizing the inland waterways; and

Whereas, The construction of the lock and dam system has spurred economic growth and a higher standard of living in the Mississippi and Illinois river basin, and today supplies more than 300,000,000 tons of the nation's cargo, supporting more than 400,000 jobs, including 90,000 in manufacturing; and

Whereas, More than 60% of American agricultural exports, including, corn, wheat, and soybeans, are shipped down the Mississippi and Illinois rivers on the way to foreign markets; and

Whereas, Illinois farmers, producers, and consumers rely on efficient transportation to remain competitive in a global economy, and efficiencies in river transport offset higher production costs, compared to those incurred by foreign competitors; and

Whereas, The Upper Mississippi and Illinois lock and dam system saves our nation more than $1,500,000,000 in higher transportation costs each year, and failing to construct 1,200-foot locks will cause farmers to use more expensive alternative modes of transportation, including trucks and trains; and

Whereas, According to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, congestion along the Upper Mississippi and Illinois Rivers is costing Illinois and other producers and consumers in the basin $98,000,000 per year in higher transportation costs; and

Whereas, River transportation is the most environmentally friendly form of transporting goods and commodities, creating almost no noise pollution and emitting 35% to 60% fewer pollutants than either trucks or trains, according to the U.S. EPA; and

Whereas, Moving away from river transport would add millions of trucks and rail cars to our nation's infrastructure, adding air pollution, traffic congestion, and greater wear and tear on highways; and

Whereas, Backwater lakes created by the lock and dam system provide breeding grounds for migratory waterfowl and fish; and

Whereas, The lakes and 500 miles of wildlife refuge also support a $1,000,000,000-a-year recreational industry, including hunting, fishing, and tourism jobs; and

Whereas, Upgrading the system of locks and dams on the Upper Mississippi and Illinois rivers will provide 3,000 construction and related jobs over a 15-20 year period; and

Whereas, In 1999 Illinois was the leading shipping state, with more than 66,000,000 tons of Illinois products, including grain, coal, chemicals, aggregates, and other products, representing a value of more than $8,000,000,000; and

Whereas, 109,000,000 tons of commodities including grain, coal, chemicals, aggregates, and other products were shipped to, from, and within Illinois by barge, representing $16,000,000,000 in value; and

Whereas, An additional 136,000,000 tons of commodities pass Illinois' borders on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, representing a value of more than $43,000,000,000; and

Whereas, Shippers moving by barge in Illinois realized a savings of approximately $1,000,000,000, compared to other transportation modes; and

Whereas, Illinois docks shipped products by barge to 20 states and received products from 18 states; and

Whereas, Barges moving to and from Lake Michigan use the O'Brien Lock, with the Chicago Lock passing over 36,000 recreation vessels and over 410,00 passengers on over 13,000 commercial passenger vessels; and

Whereas, There are approximately 364 manufacturing facilities, terminals, and docks on the waterways of Illinois, representing thousand of jobs in the State; therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Ninety-Second General Assembly of the State of Illinois, the Senate concurring herein, That we recognize the importance of inland waterway transportation to Illinois agriculture and to industry in the State, the region, and the nation, and that we urge Congress to authorize funding to construct 1,200-foot locks on the Upper Mississippi and Illinois River System; and be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this Resolution be delivered to the President Pro Tempore and the Secretary of the United States Senate, the Speaker and the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, the Chair of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, the Chair of the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, and to the Illinois congressional delegation.

POM-302. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma relative to the United States Trade Representative preserve the traditional powers of state and local governments while negotiating international investment agreements; and directing distribution; to the Committee on Finance.

RESOLUTION NO. 71

Whereas, the United States government, through the United States Trade Representative, is negotiating to create or interpret investment agreements under the proposed Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA), bilateral agreements such as the United States-Chile agreement, the investment chapter of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), and potentially under the World Trade Organization (WTO); and

Whereas, investment agreements affect state and local powers, including, but not limited to, zoning, protection of ground water and other natural resources, corporate ownership of land and casinos, law enforcement by courts, public services, and sovereign immunity; and

Whereas, investment rules under these agreements deviate from United States legal precedents on taking law and deference to legislative determination on protecting the public interest; and

Whereas, investment rules do not safeguard any category of law from investor complaints including, but not limited to, laws passed in the interest of protecting human or animal health, environmental resources, human rights, and labor rights; and

Whereas, foreign investors have used the provisions of NAFTA's investment chapter to challenge core powers of state and local government including, but not limited to, regulatory power to protect ground water in California; the power of civil juries to use punitive damages to deter corporate fraud in Mississippi; the ability of states to invoke sovereign immunity in Massachusetts; and a decision by local government to deny a zoning permit for construction of a hazardous waste dump in Guadalupe, Mexico; and

Whereas, serious concerns about international investment agreements have been expressed by national government associations, including the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL), which urged federal trade negotiators not to commit the United States to further investor-to-state dispute provisions such as those pending under NAFTA, and the National League of Cities, which has expressed concern that expansion of investment rules could undermine the successful effort by state and local governments to defeat legislation to expand compensation for takings in the 104th Congress.

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Senate of the 2nd session of the 48th Oklahoma Legislature, the House of Representatives concurring therein:

That the Oklahoma State Legislature respectfully memorializes the President and Congress of the United States that the United States Trade Representative: preserve the traditional powers of state and local governments by requiring that negotiators of international investment agreements carve out state and local governments from the scope of future investment agreements or exclude investor-to-state disputes from investment agreements; ensure that international investment rules do not give greater rights to foreign investors than United States investors enjoy under the United States Constitution; ensure that international investment rules do not undermine traditional police powers of state and local governments to protect public health, conserve environmental resources, and regulate fair compensation; ensure that all proceedings are open to the public and that all submissions, findings, and decisions are promptly made public, consistent with the need to protect classified information, and that amicus briefs will be accepted and considered by investment tribunals; and provide that an investor's claim against its host government, must consent to the investor's claim against its host government, if investor-to-state disputes are retained.

That a copy of this resolution be distributed to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the United States Trade Representative, to members of Oklahoma's Congressional Delegation, and to the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL).

POM-303. A Senate concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas relative to the establishment of a national holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 1620

Whereas, Cesar Chavez, founder of the United Farm Workers of America, AFL-CIO, dedicated his life to the cause of justice for farm workers. Through his dedication, Cesar Chavez built not only a union but a movement of all races to continue the endless struggle to fight for workers' rights, civil rights and human rights; and

Whereas, Cesar Chavez was a role model for all workers, especially for Latinos and their children; and

Whereas, Cesar Chavez taught us to use power in the nonviolent manner and to employ this principle to secure justice for all workers in the labor movement; and

Whereas, His death on April 23, 1993 brought the Latino community together to continue his struggle to obtain justice and to secure a better life by organizing unions at the workplace; and

Whereas, A resolution is pending in the United States Congress to establish a national holiday in memory of Cesar Chavez: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas, the House of Representatives concur- ring therein: That we urge the adoption of the United States House of Representatives Concurrent Resolution No. 3 providing for a national holiday honoring Cesar Chavez and that this holiday be celebrated on Cesar Chavez's birthday, March 31; and

Be it further resolved: That the Secretary of State send enrolled copies of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives and to each member of the Kansas congressional delegation.

POM-304. A resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire relative to the Pledge of Allegiance; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 26

Whereas, on June 26, 2002, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit ruled the recitation of the pledge of allegiance in public schools to be an unconstitutional endorsement of religion in violation of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution; and

Whereas, the state of New Hampshire denounces the ruling of the Ninth Circuit; and

Whereas, the state of New Hampshire affirms the importance of the pledge of allegiance in honoring those citizens who have fallen in defense our country; and

Whereas, the state of New Hampshire affirms the importance of the pledge of allegiance in the education of the youth of our country; and

Whereas, the state of New Hampshire reaffirms the right to recite the pledge of allegiance as an exercise of free speech protected under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives:

That the New Hampshire house of representatives strongly disagrees with the ruling of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit; and

That the New Hampshire house of representatives reaffirms the right to recite the pledge of allegiance as an exercise of free speech protected under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution; and

That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States; the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives; the President of the United States Senate; the Justices of the United States Supreme Court, and the members of the New Hampshire congressional delegation.

POM-305. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to the Pledge of Allegiance; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 242

Whereas, The decision of the Ninth United States Circuit Court of Appeals that the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag is unconstitutional is an egregious error that cannot be allowed to stand as our law. In this time of war, especially, we are shocked that an expression of devotion and loyalty to our nation's flag and all it represents should be suppressed by a three-judge panel of the most reversed United States Court of Appeals; and

Whereas, The Ninth Circuit's ruling that the words "under God" somehow represent the establishment of an official state church in violation of the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution is ludicrous. No state church has been established in the nearly five decades since those words were added to the Pledge of Allegiance. The freedom to believe and practice any religion, or to believe and practice no religion at all, is an ingrained part of our society. The purportedly terrible impact of reciting "under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance, should a person choose to do so, has not and will not happen; and

Whereas, Should the Ninth Circuit fail to correct this ruling, the United States Supreme Court should reverse this ruling as a gross misinterpretation of our Constitution and astounding lack of common sense. Our flag unites us, regardless of our heritage. Our Pledge of Allegiance to our flag, which represents all the freedoms we cherish and defend, must be preserved; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That we condemn the decision of the Ninth United States Circuit Court of Appeals that ruled that the Pledge of Allegiance is unconstitutional; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the judges of the Ninth United States Circuit Court of Appeals, the justices of the United States Supreme Court, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

POM-306. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to designating October 2002 as Respect Month and October 30, 2002, as Respect Your Neighborhood Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 244

Whereas, For over ten years, the state of Michigan has recognized October as Respect Month, a time for adults with influence over young people to talk with them about respect; and

Whereas, The state of Michigan has proclaimed October 30 as Respect Your Neighborhood Day, a time for people of all ages to launch projects that encourage respect for one another and serve their communities as a whole; and

Whereas, this has led young people to participate in such projects including the clean up of vacant lots and helping senior citizens; and

Whereas, In 1998, the City Councils of Detroit and Highland Park voted to make Respect Month and Respect Your Neighborhood Day permanent occasions in their cities and to request the President and the Congress of the United States to proclaim such occasions on a national level; and

Whereas, In 1999, the Highland Park School Board made a similar request; and

Whereas, Encouraging adults to help create an atmosphere of respect may avert tragedies and save lives. The recent horrors on September 11, 2001, and the shootings in schools like Columbine are prime examples of why prevention is crucial; and

Whereas, Such tragedies demonstrate why it is imperative that adults with influence over children communicate basic tenets of respect and demonstrate ways in which serving our communities can help maintain the dignity of all members of society; and

Whereas, Respect Month will function as a time to positively model respect, promote respect, and encourage youth and their peers to do the same for each other, their communities, and mankind; and

Whereas, Adults who can have an impact on children by putting an emphasis on the meaning of and the need for respect in society are invaluable to this cause, and character education brings about a greater respect and appreciation for all. The meaning of respect is ascertained during childhood, and the exhibiting of respect by adults is of great importance; and

Whereas, Proclaiming Respect Month and Respect Your Neighborhood Day will encourage service projects and conflict resolution courses, which are two ways to combat poor self-esteem and lack of self-respect which can lead to violence; and

Whereas, The existing diversity in our communities must be admired, appreciated, and valued, but without respect, this society will not achieve its full potential; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That the members of this legislative body commemorate October 2002 as Respect Month and October 30, 2002, as Respect Your Neighborhood Day on a permanent basis in the state of Michigan; and be it further

TEXT OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDED RESOLUTION OF RATIFICATION

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein),

Section 1. Advice and Consent to Ratification of the Protocol Concerning Specifically Protected Areas and Wildlife to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, subject to Reservations, an Understanding, and a Declaration.

The Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the Protocol Concerning Specifically Protected Areas and Wildlife to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, including Annexes, done at Kingston on January 18, 1990 (Treaty Doc. 103-5), subject to the reservations in section 2, the understanding in Section 3, and the declaration in Section 4.

Section 2. Reservations.

The advice and consent of the Senate under section 1 is subject to the following reservations, which shall be included in the instrument of ratification.

(1) The United States of America does not consider itself bound by Article 11(1) of the Protocol to the extent that United States law permits the limited taking of flora and fauna listed in Annexes I and II—

(A) which is incidental, or

(B) for the purposes of public display, scientific research, photography for educational or commercial purposes, or rescue and rehabilitation.

(2) The United States has long supported environmental impact assessment procedures, and has actively sought to promote the adoption of such procedures throughout the world. U.S. law and policy require environmental impact assessments for major Federal actions significantly affecting the quality of the human environment. Accordingly, although the United States expects that it will, for the most part, be in compliance with Article 13, the United States does not accept an obligation under Article 13 of the Protocol to the extent that the obligations contained therein differ from the obligations of Article 12 of the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region.

(3) The United States does not consider the Protocol to apply to six species of fauna and flora that do not require the protection provided by the Protocol in U.S. territory. These species are the Alabama, Florida and Georgia populations of least tern (Sterna antillarum), the Audubon's shearwater (Puffinus lherminieri), the Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas population of the wood stork (Mycteria americana) and the Florida and Alabama populations of the brown pelican (Pelicanus occidentalis), which are listed on Annex II, as well as the fulvous whistling duck (Dendrocygna bicolor), and the populations of widgeon or ditch grass (Rupia maritima) located in the continental United States, which are listed on Annex III.

Section 3. Understanding.

The advice and consent of the Senate under section 1 is subject to the following understanding, which shall be included in the instrument of ratification:

The United States understands that the Protocol does not apply to non-native species, defined as species found outside of their natural geographic distribution, as a result of deliberate or incidental human intervention. Therefore, in the United States, certain exotic species, such as the muscovy duck (Carina moschata) and the common iguana (Iguana iguana), are not covered by the obligations of the Protocol.

Section 4. Declaration.

The advice and consent of the Senate under section 1 is subject to the following declaration:

Existing federal legislation provides sufficient legal authority to implement United States obligations under the Protocol. Accordingly, no new legislation is necessary in order for the United States to implement the Protocol.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mrs. HUTCHISON (for herself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. HATCH, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. HELMS, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. HARKIN, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. KYL, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. DODD, Mr. CRAPO, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. ALLARD, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. LOTT, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. LUGAR, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. SESSIONS, and Mr. INHOFE):

S. 2896. A bill to enhance the operation of the AMBER Alert communications network in order to facilitate the recovery of abducted children, to provide for enhanced notification on highways of alerts and information on such children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Madam President, I am introducing today with my friend from California, Senator FEINSTEIN, legislation to improve the current system of AMBER Alert plans that exist in various States. Our legislation recognizes the tremendous job that those involved in AMBER alerts are playing and we seek to build on their efforts.

In 1996, 9-year-old Amber Hagerman of Arlington, Texas was abducted and brutally murdered. Her death had such an impact on the community that local law enforcement and area broadcasters developed what is now known as AMBER Alert, America's Missing: Broadcast Emergency Response. An AMBER alert is activated by law enforcement to find a child, when a child has been abducted. An Alert triggers highway notification and broadcast messages throughout the area where the abduction occurred.

As we have seen this summer, AMBER plans in different communities have worked to bring children home safely. To date, AMBER Alert has helped recover 27 children nationwide. Many communities and states have outstanding AMBER plans, however, the vast majority of States do not yet have comprehensive, statewide coverage and lack the ability to effectively communicate between plans. This is a critical issue particularly when an abducted child is taken across State lines.

The bill I am introducing today establishes an AMBER Alert Coordinator within the Department of Justice to assist States with their AMBER plans. An AMBER Alert Coordinator is needed to address situations such as the recent examples of interstate travel with abducted children. We have witnessed several successful stories of AMBER plans helping to recover a child within a region, however, many gaps exist between the various AMBER plans around the country. The AMBER Alert Coordinator will facilitate appropriate regional coordination of AMBER alerts, particularly with interstate travel situations, and will assist states, broadcasters, and law enforcement in setting up additional AMBER plans.

The AMBER Alert Coordinator will set minimum, voluntary standards to help states coordinate when necessary. The AMBER Alert Coordinator will help to reconcile the different standards for what constitutes an AMBER alert. In doing so, the Coordinator will work with existing participants, including the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, local and state law enforcement and broadcasters to define minimum standards. Overall, the AMBER Alert Coordinator's efforts will set safeguards to make sure the AMBER alert system is used to meet its intended purpose.

In addition, the bill provides for a matching grant program. The grant program will help localities and states build or further enhance their efforts to disseminate AMBER alerts. To this end, the matching grant program will fund road signage and electronic message boards along highways, dissemination of information on abducted children, education and training, and related equipment.

Our bill has the strong support of the National Center of Missing and Exploited Children and the National Association of Broadcasters, who play essential roles in the AMBER Alert system. I urge the Senate to act expeditiously on this legislation to further protect America's children.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join Senator HUTCHISON in introducing legislation that will save children's lives by expanding the existing AMBER Alert program nationwide.

AMBER Alerts are official bulletins broadcast over the airwaves to enlist the public's help in tracking down abducted children facing imminent danger from their kidnappers.

The power of the AMBER alert can be seen in the recent kidnapping of Tamara Brooks and Jacqueline Marris.

On August 1, 2002, twenty-four hours after the State of California launched its statewide AMBER Alert program, Tamara Brooks, 16, and Jacqueline Marris, 17, were abducted from their vehicles at gunpoint in Lancaster, CA.

Shortly thereafter, the California Highway Patrol issued an AMBER Alert on the girls disappearance.

Within the next few hours, concerned members of the community called into CHP hotlines, delivering a flurry of crucial tips that helped locate the suspect.

A driver on state Highway 178 spotted the abductor's stolen white bronco in Walker Pass, approximately 70 miles east of Bakersfield.

Two hours later, a CalTrans worker spotted the suspect on Highway 178, and,

A Kern County animal control officer spotted the Bronco on a local dirt road.

Based on these tips, sheriff's deputies located the girls and their abductor, Roy Ratliff, in a vehicle in a dry riverbed, just 12 hours after the abduction.

Ratliff was killed during an exchange of gunfire with sheriff's deputies, and the girls were returned home safely.

The AMBER Alert system and the effective work of the Kern County Sheriff's Department may be the only reasons those girls are alive today.

Children abducted in States without an AMBER Alert system, however, may not have been so fortunate.

That is why we are introducing this legislation, to spur the development of State and local AMBER plans across the country so we can increase the chances that children abducted by strangers can be returned home safely.

Each year, more than 58,000 children in the United States are abducted by non-family members, often in connection with another crime.

In the most dangerous type of child abduction, stranger abduction, fully 40 percent of children are murdered.

Speed is crucial to any effective law enforcement response to these most deadly cases.

According to a study by the U.S. Department of Justice, 74 percent of children who were abducted, and later found murdered, were killed within three hours of being taken.

AMBER Alerts are a proven weapon in the fight against stranger abductions, especially in those cases where an abducted child is facing an imminent threat of harm.

The program is named after nine-year-old Amber Hagerman who was kidnapped and murdered in Arlington, TX in 1996.

The power of the AMBER alert system is that an alert can be issued within minutes of an abduction, disseminating key information of the crime to the community at large.

Nationally, since 1996, the AMBER Alert has been credited with the safe return of 29 children to their families, including one case in which an abductor reportedly released the child after hearing the alert himself.

These are 29 families who didn't have to suffer the pain of losing a loved one. Twenty-nine families who didn't have to bury a child.

Since the State of California first adopted AMBER alerts a month ago, the State has issued 13 AMBER alerts. Each of the AMBER Alerts concluded with the missing child being united with their families.

Eight of these alerts involved stranger abductions. Four involved family members, and one case is considered a false alarm.

I would like to describe two of these cases: the rescue of four-year-old Jessica Cortez from Los Angeles and 10-year-old Nichole Timmons from Riverside.

Jessica disappeared from Echo Park in Los Angeles on August 11, 2002.

But when Jessica's abductor took her to a clinic for medical care, receptionist Denise Leon recognized Jessica from the AMBER Alert and notified law enforcement.

Without the publicity generated by the alert, Jessica could have been lost to her parents forever.

Nichole Timmons was kidnapped from her Riverside home on August 20.

In Nichole's case, an Alert was issued not just in California, but in Nevada as well.

A tribal police officer in Nevada spotted the truck of Nichole's abductor and stopped him within 24 hours of the abduction.

He was found with duct tape and a metal pipe.

The AMBER Alert enabled Nichole to return home safely to her parents.

The legislation we are introducing today is simple, yet very important.

First, it would establish a national coordinator for AMBER Alerts in the Department of Justice to expand the network of AMBER Alert systems and to coordinate the issuance of region-wide AMBER Alerts.

We need regional coordination of AMBER Alert because, as we saw in the case of Nichole Timmons, abductors of children may cross State lines as they flee crime scenes.

Second, the bill would establish grant programs in the Department of Justice and the Department of Transportation to provide for the development of AMBER Alert systems, electronic message boards, and training and education programs in states that do not have AMBER Alerts.

To date, AMBER Alert systems exist in only 15 States and 32 local and regional jurisdictions. This bill would help the expansion of AMBER Alerts to new jurisdictions.

Third, the bill directs the Department of Justice to establish minimum standards for the coordination of AMBER alerts between jurisdictions.

Minimum standards are needed because many of the existing AMBER plans have slightly different standards for an AMBER Alert, such as when to issue an alert.

Without a common standard, sharing AMBER Alerts between states will be difficult.

I would also like to stress what the bill does not do.

It is the specific intent of this bill not to interfere with the operation of the 50 State and local AMBER plans that are working so well.

Participation in regional AMBER plans is only voluntary, and any plan that wishes to go it alone may still do so.

The bill also does not change the very strict criteria of the AMBER Alert.

AMBER Alerts are successful because they are issued rarely, and only when strict criteria are met.

A typical AMBER Alert is only issued when a law enforcement agency confirms that a stranger abduction has occurred, the child is in imminent danger, and there is information available that, if disseminated to the public could assist in the safe recovery of the child.

The effectiveness of the system depends on the continued judicious use of the alert so that the public does not grow to ignore the warnings.

This bill is carefully designed to preserve the Alert's ongoing effectiveness.

In sum, through this legislation, we can extend to every corner of the nation a network of AMBER Alerts that will protect our children.

If we can set up a program that will increase the odds that an abducted child can return to his or her family safely, then I believe the program will be well worth it.

We know the AMBER Alert system works. We know that every community in America should have access to it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am proud to join with Senators KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON and DIANE FEINSTEIN in introducing the "National AMBER Alert Network Act of 2002" which will extend the AMBER Alert (America's Missing: Broadcast Emergency Response) system across our Nation. The recent wave of child abductions across our Nation, including the kidnapping of Elizabeth Smart in my own home state of Utah, has highlighted the need for legislation to enhance our ability to protect our Nation's children against predators of all types.

When a child is abducted, time is of the essence. All too often it is only a matter of hours before a kidnaper commits an act of violence against the child. Alert systems, such as the AMBER Alert system, galvanize entire communities to assist law enforcement in the timely search for and safe return of child victims.

The AMBER Alert system was developed in 1996 in Texas after 9-year-old Amber Hagerman was kidnapped. To date, the system has been credited with the recovery of 27 missing children. Nonetheless, only 16 States have adopted statewide AMBER Alert systems. Just this year, my home State of Utah adopted a statewide alert program aimed at preventing child abduction called "Rachel Alert." The program was named after young Rachel Runyan who was abducted and later found murdered.

We recently witnessed the success of the AMBER Alert system in California. There the AMBER system was used to broadcast the disappearance of Nichole Timmons who was safely recovered in the neighboring state of Nevada after she was recognized. In another recent California case, the AMBER Alert system was used when Tamera Brooks and Jaqueline Marris were kidnapped. Just hours after their abduction, and minutes before their possible murder, the two young women were found.

The legislation we introduce today will enhance our ability to recover abducted children by establishing a Coordinator within the Department of Justice to assist States in developing and coordinating alert plans nationwide. The Act also provides for a matching grant program through the Department of Justice and the Department of Transportation for highway signs, education and training programs, and the equipment necessary to facilitate AMBER Alert systems.

I support the National AMBER Alert Network Act and other legislative proposals that will improve our ability on a national level to combat crimes against children. For that reason, I will introduce in the coming days comprehensive legislation that will enhance existing laws, investigative tools, criminal penalties and child crime resources in a variety of ways. I believe Congress must do all it can to ensure that we devote the same intensity of purpose to crimes committed against children, as we do to other serious criminal offenses, such as those involving terrorism.

We have no greater resource than our children. I invite the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other entities and professionals who are charged with protecting our children to work with me to improve our Federal laws and to assist States in doing the same.

I commend Senator HUTCHISON for her tireless efforts on behalf of children and families and urge my colleagues to work with us to enact this critical legislation which will increase the chances that future victims of child predators will be found swiftly and returned home safely.

S. 2897. A bill to assist in the conservation of marine turtles and the nesting habitats of marine turtles in foreign countries; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the "Marine Turtle Conservation Act of 2002."

Marine turtles were once abundant, but now they are in serious trouble. Six of the seven recognized species are listed as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act, and all seven species have been included in Appendix I of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Flora and Fauna, CITES. Because marine turtles are long-lived, late-maturing, and highly migratory, they are particularly vulnerable to the impacts of human exploitation and habitat loss. In addition, for some species, illegal trade seriously threatens wild populations. Because of the immense challenges facing marine turtles, the resources available to date have not been sufficient to cope with the continued loss of nesting habitat due to human activities and the resulting diminution of marine turtle populations.

The Marine Turtle Conservation Act of 2002 is modeled after the successful Asian Elephant Conservation Act, the African Elephant Conservation Act, and the Rhinoceros and Tiger Conservation Act. These acts have established programs within the Department of the Interior to assist in the conservation and preservation of these species around the world. More than 300 projects have been funded and generated millions of dollars in private matching funds from sponsors representing a diverse group of conservation organizations. The projects range from purchasing anti-poaching equipment for wildlife rangers to implementing elephant conservation plans to aerial monitoring of the Northern white rhinoceros.

The Marine Turtle Conservation Act of 2002 will assist in the recovery and protection of marine turtles by supporting and providing financial resources for projects to conserve nesting habitats of marine turtles in foreign countries and marine turtles while they are found in such habitats, to prevent illegal trade in marine turtle parts and projects, and to address other threats to the survival of marine turtles. The bill authorizes $5 million annually to implement the program.

This legislation will help to preserve this ancient and distinctive part of the world's biological diversity.

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 2898. A bill for the relief by Jaya Gulab Tolani and Hitesh Gulab Tolani; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, I rise to introduce a private relief bill that would provide permanent legal resident status for Hitesh Tolani and his mother, Jaya Tolani, who face voluntary removal from this country.

I feel that the Tolanis' case presents a compelling need for legislative action. Hitesh Tolani, who is a scholarship student at Wofford College in Spartanburg, SC, came to the United States with his mother, Jaya, and father, Gulab, in 1984. When Hitesh arrived in this country, he was a toddler. Hitesh has a younger brother, Ravi, who was born here and is a United States citizen.

The Tolanis' efforts to become United States citizens was beset by tragedy. Gulab's brother, who served as a sponsor, died during the family's efforts to become legal permanent residents. Furthermore, just days before Gulab was to interview in New York in hopes of gaining legal permanent resident status for himself and his family, he passed away. Jaya was left with no way to legalize her or Hitesh's status.

In the same year in which Gulab died, Jaya was also diagnosed with breast cancer. In the midst of these difficulties, Jaya was left with very few alternatives.

When Hitesh learned of his illegal status, he made the decision to turn himself into the authorities. After removal proceedings commenced, Hitesh and Jaya sought relief in the form of cancellation of removal. In order to succeed in this effort, it must be shown that the removal would result in "exceptional and extremely unusual hardship." In this case, the Immigration court found that the Tolanis' case did not rise to this level of hardship. The court came to this conclusion despite the fact that Hitesh has lived the vast majority of his life in the United States and is in the middle of his college studies. If forced to leave the country, Hitesh's studies will be significantly interrupted, and he will be required to return to a land that he does not remember. Additionally, Hitesh will be placed at a social and educational disadvantage because he is not fluent in the Hindi language.

During this important time in Hitesh's life, he will leave the only home that he has ever known. Yet the events surrounding his entry into the United States were completely out of his control. Hitesh has done nothing but contribute in positive ways to his hometown community of Irmo, SC, and the Wofford College community. He has demonstrated excellent moral character and has always been a model student.

Relocation to India would also create extreme hardship for Jaya, who is in remission from breast cancer. She would have to abandon her clothing store business in South Carolina and return to a land that she has not seen for twenty years. She also faces the potential breakup of her family due to the status of her youngest son, Ravi, who is a U.S. citizen. Ravi would be forced to go to India with the rest of his family or face the prospect of foster care. Ravi is not fluent in Hindi, but is very proficient in English. Ravi is also an asthmatic who must periodically use an inhaler machine. He would be subject to unhealthy air quality in Bombay, the city where the Tolanis' closest relatives reside and the place where they would settle.

The Tolani family appealed to the Board of Immigration Appeals, and the Immigration Judge's decision was affirmed without comment. The family is now appealing to the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, but the standard of review is deferential, making this an uphill climb for Hitesh and Jaya.

I have always been a strong proponent of enforcing our Nation's immigration laws. However, the Tolanis' case represents one of those rare instances where removal would be unjust. The Tolani family, if forced to leave this country, will face exceptional hardship. Hitesh is a fine young man and an outstanding student. Through no fault of his own, he faces the prospect of leaving the only home that he has ever known. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2899

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PERMANENT RESIDENCE.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), Jaya Gulab Tolani and Hitesh Gulab Tolani shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of enactment of this Act upon payment of the required visa fees.

SEC. 2. REDUCTION OF NUMBER OF AVAILABLE VISAS.

Upon the granting of permanent residence to Jaya Gulab Tolani and Hitesh Gulab Tolani, as provided in section 1, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper officer to reduce by the appropriate number during the current fiscal year the total number of immigrant visas available to natives of the country of the aliens' birth under section 203(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)).

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX):

S. 2899. A bill to establish the Atchafalaya National Heritage Area, Louisiana; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Madam President, today I rise, along with Senator BREAUX to introduce a bill to establish the Atchafalaya National Heritage Area in Louisiana. This legislation has particularly special meaning to those of us from Louisiana because of the importance of the cultural and natural resources of the Atchafalaya region to the Nation.

This legislation would establish a framework to help protect, conserve, and promote these unique natural, cultural, historical, and recreational resources of the region. Specifically, the legislation would establish a National Heritage Area in Louisiana that encompasses thirteen parishes in and around the Atchafalaya Basin swamp, America's largest river swamp. The heritage area in south-central Louisiana stretches from Concordia parish to the north, where the Mississippi River begins to partially flow into the Atchafalaya River, all the way to the Gulf of Mexico in the south. The thirteen parishes are: St. Mary, Iberia, St. Martin, St. Landry, Avoyelles, Pointe Coupee, Iberville, Assumption, Terrebonne, Lafayette, West Baton Rouge, Concordia, and East Baton Rouge. This boundary is the same area covered by the existing Atchafalaya Trace State Heritage Area.

This measure will appoint the existing Atchafalaya Trace Commission as the federally recognized "local coordinating entity." The commission is composed of thirteen members with one representative appointed by each parish in the heritage area. Both the Atchafalaya Trace Commission and the Atchafalaya Trace State Heritage Area were created by the Louisiana Legislature a number of years ago. The Atchafalaya Trace State Heritage Area program currently receives some State funding, and already has staff working at the Louisiana Department of Culture, Recreation & Tourism, DCRT, under Lieutenant Governor Kathleen Blanco. State funds were used to create the management plan for the heritage area, which followed "feasibility analysis" guidelines as recommended by the National Park Service. Therefore, the recently-completed management plan need only be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for approval as this legislation would recognize an existing local coordinating entity that will oversee the implementation of this plan. We are very proud that this state heritage area has already completed the complicated planning process, with participation of local National Park Service representatives, while using a standard of planning quality equal to that of existing national heritage areas. All at no cost to the Federal Government.

Please let me also emphasize that this legislation protects existing private property rights. It will not interfere with local land use ordinances or regulations, as it is specifically prohibited from doing so. Nor does this legislation grant any powers of real property acquisition to the local coordinating entity or heritage area program. In addition, the legislation does not impose any environmental rule or process or cause any change in Federal environmental quality standards different from those already in effect.

Heritage areas are based on cooperation and collaboration at all levels. This legislation remains true to the core concept behind heritage areas. The heritage area concept has been used successfully in various parts of our nation to promote historic preservation, natural and cultural resources protection, heritage tourism and sustainable economic revitalization for both urban and rural areas. Heritage areas provide a flexible framework for government agencies, private organizations and businesses and landowners to work together on a coordinated regional basis. The Atchafalaya National Heritage Area will join the Cane River National Heritage Area to become the second National Heritage Area in Louisiana, ultimately joining the 23 existing National Heritage Areas around the Nation.

The initiative to develop the Atchafalaya National Heritage Area is an outgrowth of a grassroots effort to achieve multiple goals of this region. Most important among these is providing opportunities for the future, while at the same time not losing anything that makes this place so special. Residents from all over the region, local tourism agencies, State agencies such as the DCRT and the Department of Natural Resources, the State legislature, Federal agencies including the National Park Service and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, parish governments, conservation and preservation groups, local businesses and local landowners have all participated in this endeavor to make it the strong initiative it is today. These groups have been very supportive of the heritage area effort, and as time moves on, the heritage area will continue to involve more and more of the area's most important resource, its people.

I would also like to give you a brief overview of the resources that make this place significant to the entire country. Not only is it important to our Nation's history but it is also critical to understanding America's future. The name of the place itself—Atchafalaya, comes from the American Indians and means "long river." This name signifies the first settlers of the region, descendants of whom still live there today.

Other words come to mind in describing the Atchafalaya: mysterious dynamic, multi-cultural; enchanting, bountiful; threatened and undiscovered. This region is one of the most complex and least understood places in Louisiana and the Nation. Yet, the stories of the Atchafalaya Heritage Area are emblematic of the broader American experience. Here there are opportunities to understand and witness the complicated, sometimes harmonious, sometimes adversarial interplay between nature and culture. The history of the United States has been shaped by the complex dance of its people working with, against, and for, nature. Within the Atchafalaya a penchant for adventure, adaptation, ingenuity, and exploitation has created a cultural legacy unlike anywhere else in the world.

The heart of the heritage area is the Atchafalaya Basin. It is the largest river swamp in the United States, larger than the more widely known Everglades or Okefenokee Swamp. The Atchafalaya is characterized by a maze of streams, and at one time was thickly forested with old-growth cypress and tupelo trees. The Basin provides outstanding habitat for a remarkably diverse array of wildlife, including the endangered American bald eagle and Louisiana black bear. The region's unique ecology teems with life. More than 85 species of fish, crustaceans such as crawfish, wildlife including alligators; an astonishing array of well over 200 species of birds, from waterfowl to songbirds, forest-dwelling mammals such as deer, squirrel, beaver and other commercially important furbearers all make their home here. Bottomland hardwood-dependent bird species breed here in some of the highest densities ever recorded in annual North American Breeding Bird Surveys. The Basin also forms part of the Mississippi Valley Flyway for migratory waterfowl and is a major wintering ground for thousands of these geese and ducks. In general, the Atchafalaya Basin has a significant proportion of North America's breeding wading birds, such as herons, egrets, ibises, and spoonbills. Some of the largest flocks of Wood Storks in North America summer here, and the southern part of the Basin has a healthy population of Bald Eagles nesting every winter.

The region's dynamic system of waterways, geology, and massive earthen guide levees reveals a landscape that is at once fragile and awesome. The geology and natural systems of the Atchafalaya Heritage Area have fueled the economy of the region for centuries. For decades the harvest of cypress, cotton, sugar cane, crawfish, salt, oil, gas, and Spanish moss, have been important sources of income for the region's residents. The crawfish industry has been particularly important to the lives of Atchafalaya residents and Louisiana has become the largest crawfish producer in the United States. Sport fishing and other forms of commercial fishing are important here, too, but unfortunately, natural resource extraction and a changing environment have drastically depleted many of these resources and forced residents to find new ways to make a living.

Over the past century, the Atchafalaya Basin has become a study of man's monumental effort to control nature. After the catastrophic Mississippi River flood of 1927 left thousands dead and millions displaced, the U.S. Congress decreed that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers should develop an intricate system of levees to protect human settlements, particularly New Orleans. Today, the Mississippi River is caged within the walls of earthen and concrete levees and manipulated with a complex system of locks, barrages and floodgates. The Atchafalaya River runs parallel to the Mississippi and through the center of the Basin. In times of flooding the river basin serves as the key floodway in controlling floodwaters headed for the large population centers of Baton Rouge and New Orleans by diverting waters from the Mississippi River to the Gulf of Mexico. This system was sorely tested in 1973 when floodwaters threatened to break through the floodgates and permanently divert the Mississippi River into the Atchafalaya. However, after this massive flood event, new land started forming off the coast. These new land formations make up the Atchafalaya Delta, and is the only significant area of new land being built in the United States. These vast amounts of Mississippi River sediment are also raising filling in the Basin itself, raising the level of land in certain areas of the basin and filling in lakes and waterways. And to demonstrate just how complex this ecosystem is, one only needs to realize that just to the East of the Delta, Terrebonne parish, also in the heritage area, is experiencing some of the most significant coastal land loss in the country.

Over the centuries, the ever-changing natural environment has shaped the lives of the people living in the basin. Residents have profited from and been imperiled by nature. The popular cultural identity of the region is strongly associated with the Cajuns, descendants of the French-speaking Acadians who settled in south Louisiana after being deported by the British from Nova Scotia, (formerly known as Acadia). Twenty-five hundred to three thousand exiled Acadians repatriated in Louisiana where they proceeded to re-establish their former society.

Today, in spite of complex social, cultural, and demographic transformations, Cajuns maintain a sense of group identity and continue to display a distinctive set of cultural expressions nearly two-hundred-and-fifty years after their exile from Acadia. Cajun culture has become increasingly popular outside of Louisiana. Culinary specialties adapted from France and Acadia such as etouffee, boudin, andouille, crepes, beignets and sauces thickened with roux, delight food lovers well beyond Louisiana's borders. Cajun music has also "gone mainstream" with its blend of French folk songs and ballads and instrumental dance music, and more recent popular country, rhythm-and-blues, and rock music influences. While the growing interest in Cajun culture has raised appreciation for its unique traditions, many of the region's residents are concerned about the growing commercialization and stereotyping that threatens to diminish the authentic Cajun ways of life.

While the Atchafalaya Heritage Area may be well known for its Cajun culture, there is an astonishing array of other cultures within these parishes. Outside of New Orleans, the Atchafalaya Heritage Area is the most racially and ethnically complex region of Louisiana, and has been so for many years. A long legacy of multiculturalism presents interesting opportunities to examine how so many distinct cultures have survived in relative harmony. There may be interesting lessons to learn from here as our nation becomes increasingly heterogeneous. The cultural complexity of this region has created a rich tapestry of history and traditions, evidenced by the architecture, music, language, food and festivals unlike anyplace else. Ethnic groups of the Atchafalaya include: African-Americans, Black Creoles, Asians, Chinese, Filipinos, Vietnamese, Lebanese, Cajuns, Spanish Islenos, Italians, Scotch-Irish, and American Indian tribes such as the Attakapa, Chitimacha, Coushatta, Houma, Opelousa and Tunica-Biloxi.

This heritage area has a wealth of existing cultural, historic, natural, scenic, recreational and visitor resources on which to build. Scenic resources include numerous State Wildlife Management Areas and National Wildlife Refuges, as well as ten designated state scenic byways that fall partially or entirely within the heritage area. The Office of State Parks operates three historic sites in the heritage area, and numerous historic districts and buildings can be found in the region. There are also nine Main Street communities in the heritage area. Outdoor recreational resources include two State Parks and a multitude of waterways and bayous. Hunting, fishing, boating, and canoeing, and more recently birdwatching and cycling, are popular ways to experience the region. Various visitor attractions, interpretive centers and visitor information centers exist to help residents and tourists alike better understand and navigate many of the resources in the heritage area. Major roads link the heritage area's central visitor entrance points and large population centers, especially New Orleans. Much of the hospitality industry servicing the Atchafalaya exists around the larger cities of Baton Rouge, Lafayette and Houma. However, more and more bed and breakfasts and heritage accommodations, such as houseboat rentals, are becoming more numerous in the smaller towns and rural areas.

These are just some of the examples of the richness and significance of this region. This legislation will assist communities throughout this heritage area who are committed to the conservation and appropriate development of these assets. Furthermore, this legislation will bring a level of prestige and national and international recognition that this most special of places certainly deserves.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. WELLSTONE (for himself and Mr. DAYTON):

S. 2900. A bill to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the "Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building"; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I rise today to pay tribute to an American hero. Tom Burnett, Jr. was a beloved husband and father, an adored son, and an able business leader. He was a person who would not, and did not, sit quietly as terrorists carried out their plan last year on September 11.

I am introducing a bill today, along with my colleague from Minnesota, Senator DAYTON. Our bill would designate a U.S. Postal Service facility in Bloomington, MN as the "Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building." It is a companion proposal to a bill introduced by our House colleague, Representative JIM RAMSTAD, whose district includes Bloomington.

Tom Burnett, Jr., who grew up in Bloomington, was aboard United Flight 93 on September 11 of last year. America owes Tom a deep debt of gratitude for his bravery on that day. It is possible that Members of Congress, including myself, could owe him our very lives. We will never know for sure. Tom is believed by investigators to have been among those passengers who kept the hijackers from crashing Flight 93 into a national landmark, most likely the White House or the Capitol. That, of course, would likely have resulted in many more deaths than already occurred that day. Instead, as we all know, Flight 93 crashed in a Pennsylvania field.

After listening to the tape from the flight's black box, law enforcement officials have described a desperate struggle aboard the plane. As FBI Director Mueller said after being briefed on the contents of the tape, "We believe those passengers were absolute heroes, and their actions during this flight were heroic."

Tom Burnett, Jr. was 38 years old when he died. A 1986 graduate of the Carlson School of Management at the University of Minnesota and a member of Alpha Kappa Psi fraternity, he had shown selfless leadership before. As a quarterback at Thomas Jefferson High School in Bloomington, Tom's inspired play led his team to the conference championship game in 1980. He was a successful business leader as chief operating officer for a medical device manufacturer in California.

We will never forget the ultimate sacrifice of Tom and many other heroes last September 11. Our thoughts and prayers today are with Tom's family: his wife Deena; their daughters Madison, Halley and Anna-Clair; his parents Thomas, Sr. and Beverly; and his sisters Martha O'Brien and Mary Margaret Burnett. Bloomington will be proud to have this post office named for Tom Burnett, Jr. We all are proud of this son of Minnesota.

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 2901. A bill to provide that bonuses and other extraordinary or excessive compensation of corporate insiders and wrongdoers may be included in the bankruptcy estate; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I come to the floor today to introduce legislation that will bring more accountability to corporate officers and directors when a company goes bankrupt. This bill contains substantially the same language I had in an amendment I filed to the corporate reform bill that we passed into law a couple of months ago, but unfortunately my bankruptcy amendment was not considered. My legislation, the "Corporate Accountability in Bankruptcy Act", would clarify that the bonuses and other excessive compensation of corporate directors and wrongdoers can be brought back into a bankruptcy estate when a company goes bankrupt. This legislation is equitable because corporate officers and those individuals that have engaged in wrongdoing and violated the securities and accounting laws should not be able to make outrageous amounts of money off of a company which has gone bankrupt, while the company's employees, shareholders and creditors are left carrying the burden of the bankruptcy. Furthermore, corporate officers and insiders shouldn't be allowed to get bonuses and loans when a company has done so poorly to go bankrupt. They don't deserve that kind of excessive compensation. The plain fact is that corporate officers and those who engage in illegal activity should not be allowed to benefit where their actions have contributed to the downfall of the company. I don't think that's fair, and my bill would ensure that there is some equity in terms of who gets left holding the bag when a company goes bankrupt.

Currently, the Bankruptcy Code permits a trustee to recover assets which a debtor has previously distributed to creditors within a certain time period prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition. This allows a trustee to increase a debtor's assets for the fair treatment and equitable distribution of assets among all creditors, as well as to help shore up a debtor's assets during a reorganization.

Section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code allows a trustee to recover assets from an insider made within a year of the filing of a bankruptcy petition. However, the Bankruptcy Code does not clearly establish that this section applies to bonuses and other extraordinary or excessive compensation of insiders, officers and directors. A cursory review of the case law by my staff and the Congressional Research Service indicates that the courts have not developed this issue, and that relevant case law is not dispositive on the matter of whether bonuses and excessive compensation are avoidable in bankruptcies of publically held companies.

In addition, section 548 of the Bankruptcy Code allows a trustee to recover transfers of assets, made within one year, where there has been a fraudulent transaction or where a debtor has received less than what is reasonably equivalent in value. Here too, the Bankruptcy Code is not clear as to whether this section applies to the bonuses and other extraordinary or excessive compensation of officers, directors or other company employees who have violated securities laws or engaged in illegal accounting practices when their conduct, but not their compensation, has led to the company's bankruptcy. Similarly, the case law is not dispositive on this matter either.

I think everyone would agree that a trustee should be able to recover these kinds of assets when a company goes bankrupt. Corporate bigwigs and wrongdoers shouldn't be able to keep their bonuses, loans or other excessive compensation when a company goes under. Corporate mismanagement and irresponsibility should not be rewarded, and the bad guys need to be held accountable.

So I think that we need to clarify the Bankruptcy Code in order that bonuses, loans, and other extraordinary or excessive compensation that the company has given to the insiders and wrongdoers can be drawn back into the bankruptcy estate.

My legislation is simply and straightforward. The Corporate Accountability in Bankruptcy Act would specifically provide in section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code that a trustee may recover bonuses, loans, nonqualified deferred compensation, and any other extraordinary or excessive compensation as determined by the court, made to an insider, officer or director and made within one year before the date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

In addition, the Corporate Accountability in Bankruptcy Act would specifically provide in section 548 of the Bankruptcy Code that a trustee may recover bonuses, loans, nonqualified deferred compensation, and any other extraordinary or excessive compensation, as determined by the court, paid to an officer, director or employee who has committed securities or accounting violations, within 4 years of the filing of the bankruptcy petition. My bill extends the present one year reach-back period for fraudulent transfers in the Bankruptcy Code to 4 years, I did that because a majority of states have adopted a 4 year time period or the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act which allows for a 4 year time frame. I believe that these changes to section 548 are fair because they are tied to excessiveness and wrongdoing. Simply said, illegal acts should not be rewarded with a big fat paycheck.

The point of this bill is that corporate officers and wrongdoers should not be able to keep bonuses, loans and other excessive compensation when the company goes under and others, employees, creditors and investors, are left holding an empty bag through no fault of their own. It's just not fair. So I hope that my colleagues will support the Corporate Accountability in Bankruptcy Act to make the Bankruptcy Code clear that corporate bigwigs and wrongdoers cannot unjustly enrich themselves and their excessive compensation and loans can and will be brought back into the bankruptcy estate.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Treaty.

The Treaty is one of a series of stolen vehicle treaties being negotiated by the United States in order to eliminate the difficulties faced by owners of vehicles that have been stolen and transported across international borders. Like several in this series, this Treaty also covers aircraft. When it enters into force, it will be an effective tool to facilitate the return of U.S. vehicles and aircraft that have been stolen, robbed, or embezzled and found in Honduras.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DUAL TRACKING OF LEGISLATION

Mr. REID. Madam President, we are trying something in the Senate that we have tried on a number of other occasions but not often. We are going to do two bills at one time. It is dual tracking. We are going to take up the Interior Appropriations bill in the morning and go until 12 noon on that legislation. At 12 o'clock, we will have an hour of morning business, and then we will go back to the Homeland Security bill. We will do the same thing on Thursday.

We hope that people will be ready on both pieces of legislation to offer any amendment or amendments they might have. I would feel that we were wasting a lot of time if, for example, tomorrow we did not have some amendments offered on the Interior Appropriations bill. The leader has indicated that he expects late votes after tomorrow, which will be Thursday.

We have to stop early tomorrow because former Vice President Mondale will be here to address Members of the Senate. We have a lot of work to do and a very limited amount of time in which to do everything we need to do before our adjournment. Members are put on notice we will be working on Fridays and Mondays, and we will have votes later than normal on Fridays and earlier than usual on Mondays, with the exception of a week from next Monday.

CONFIRMATION

Executive Nomination Confirmed by the Senate September 3, 2002:

THE JUDICIARY

TERRENCE F. MCVERRY, OF PENNSYLVANIA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

SENATE—Wednesday, September 4, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable E. BENJAMIN NELSON, a Senator from the State of Nebraska.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, whose presence surrounds us, whose power enables us, whose peace comforts us and whose providence cares for us, we praise You that You are Sovereign of this Nation. The founders of our Nation believed that they derived their powers through You and governed with divinely delegated authority. Through the years of our history, You have raised up great leaders who placed their trust in You and sought Your best for America. Thank You for the Senators who stand in this sacred heritage and prayerfully seek Your will. Continue to grant them humility to ask for Your guidance, the magnanimity to be of one mind and heart as fellow patriots, and the determination to press on to accomplish the urgent work before them. Remind them that millions of Americans are praying for them and that You seek to answer their prayers by renewing their strength and rejuvenating their commitment. Thank You for the women and men of this Senate and for all who work with and for them. Especially today we thank you for the leadership of Sergeant at Arms Alfonso Lenhardt, who today completes this first year of excellent leadership through a challenging time of terrorist attack, anthrax panic, and the ongoing pressures of his crucial assignment as an officer of the Senate. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable E. BENJAMIN NELSON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 4, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable E. BENJAMIN NELSON, a Senator from the State of Nebraska, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5093. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5093) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the leadership has been invited to the White House this morning, and therefore this matter will be somewhat delayed until their return.

My distinguished ranking member, Mr. BURNS, is with me, and we are going to proceed with statements on the bill, after which I have two or three technical amendments which make corrections, and with the approval of my ranking member on the other side of the aisle, I shall propose those, and perhaps the Senate can move them, accept them, and get them out of the way.

The first amendment I intend to offer will not be offered until the majority leader and the majority whip return.

I am pleased to be joined by my distinguished colleague, the ranking member of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, as we bring before the Senate the Interior appropriations bill for fiscal year 2003. I am very proud of our work on this legislation.

Although this bill is not, in terms of total dollars appropriated, the largest of the 13 annual appropriations bills, it is an exceedingly important bill. It is in this legislation that we support and protect the crown jewels of this Nation, our national parks. The four land management agencies funded through this bill, the National Parks Service, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the Forest Service, and the Bureau of Land Management, are responsible for overseeing 628 million acres of land or about one-fourth of the total area of the United States.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service provide educational opportunities and critical health care to more than 1.4 million American Indians. The Department of Energy is charged with developing cutting-edge technology in the areas of fossil energy and energy conservation, and the Smithsonian Institution, along with the arts and humanities endowments, protects and promotes some of our Nation's most enduring cultural resources.

Because the bill and the report have been available for review since June 28, I will not go through each and every account line by line. I will, however, reiterate some of the highlights of the legislation.

As it now stands, the bill provides the full $2 billion requested by the President for fiscal year 2003 firefighting activities. It provides the full $1.4 billion allowed for under the conservation spending category.

It provides a $35 million increase for basic operations at our 385 national parks, including $6.1 million for enhanced security, and a total of $702 million to attack the maintenance backlog at those parks.

Our parks and wilderness areas reflect the pristine beauty, the unmatched beauty of this country. They are important to our sense of national pride, and they showcase this Nation to approximately 33 million foreign visitors every year.

The bill also provides the Fish and Wildlife Service with $460 million for refuges and wildlife. It provides $641 million for fossil energy research and development, including $150 million for the Clean Coal Technology Program, and $922 million for energy conservation programs, including $286 million for the weatherization and State energy programs.

This bill, which has been crafted by my colleague, Mr. BURNS, and the Republican and Democratic members of the subcommittee, also promotes culture and history by providing $538 million for the important work of the Smithsonian Institution, and $246 million for the arts and humanities endowments.

The funding levels contained in this bill are fully consistent with the subcommittee's allocation as agreed to unanimously by the Appropriations Committee on June 27, and as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 28.

We have used scarce resources. I emphasize, resources are scarce, and we have used scarce resources to fund all of the important missions of the Department of Interior. But our fiscal situation and the times in which we live demand discretion and frugality. Consequently, Senator BURNS and I, as managers of this bill, stand ready to oppose amendments that would increase the fiscal year 2003 spending beyond the current level in the bill. We will also discourage amendments using offsets which rely on across-the-board cuts, undefined reductions in administrative or travel expenses, or any other amorphous proposal that relies on savings that may not be real.

Finally, Mr. President, before yielding the floor, I acknowledge the efforts of several people. First, I publicly thank the subcommittee's distinguished ranking member for his help in drafting this legislation. As a westerner, Senator CONRAD BURNS brings a wealth of experience and knowledge and an important perspective to the diverse and difficult issues that always seem to come up in the Interior appropriations bill.

I applaud the dedication to duty that he exudes, and I applaud his willingness to work in a bipartisan fashion. It is a pleasure to work and to serve with Senator CONRAD BURNS on this subcommittee.

I wish to thank Senator TED STEVENS, the ranking member of the full committee. Senator STEVENS has provided invaluable advice and counsel with respect to the Interior bill. His efforts are one of the reasons this bill was unanimously reported out of the Appropriations Committee. TED STEVENS has a marvelous ability, based on a great wealth of experience, to craft workable solutions to tough problems, and I rely heavily on his sage advice and his unique and thorough, meticulous grasp of detail.

Let me thank our subcommittee staff. These are the men and women who work for Senator BURNS and for me on this important Interior bill. They are a highly dedicated group of individuals who spend a tremendous amount of time, who ensure that all members of the subcommittee have the information we need to accomplish our work. Senator BURNS and I appreciate their efforts.

I especially want to thank Peter Kiefhaber, my clerk on the Interior bill, for his conscientious approach to funding this bill and to his never-failing pleasant demeanor, for his characteristic cooperation and courtesy always, not just to me but to all other Senators as well.

I also thank the staff person on the other side, the ranking member of this committee's staff. Bruce Evans never fails to add to the near perfection, as near as we can make it, of the bill that we present to our colleagues for their study and counsel and decision. So as chairman of the subcommittee, I thank him, as well as I thank my own clerk. We have to work together. We have to get along together, and we do that. We do these things together on this subcommittee.

I urge now my colleagues to adopt this measure in a timely manner so that we can proceed to conference with the House. We need to get this work done. Senator BURNS and I stand ready, as we also stand ready with Senator STEVENS, to go forward with this bill. We will be glad to discuss amendments as we proceed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when Mr. BURNS has completed his statement, if he has one, and gets recognition, as I assume he will, that I be recognized to offer some technical amendments.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I am very happy this morning to join the Senator from West Virginia in support of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2003. Needless to say, this is a very important piece of legislation, especially for me and my colleagues in the West, particularly those in the intermountain region. This bill funds the agencies that manage the majority of our public lands.

It funds health care, education, and other services for Native Americans. It supports research and development and allows us to develop and use our domestic energy resources in a responsible manner.

Although Senator BYRD does not hail from a Western State, we are about to adopt him as a westerner. He has done a great job in putting this bill together. The bill accurately reflects the priorities of the Senate as a whole, as it remains within the subcommittee's fairly modest allocation. The bill as a whole is a mere 2 percent above the President's request and it is well below the allocation approved by the House of Representatives.

Senator BYRD has worked with me and my staff to see the specific interests of Republican Members have been fairly treated. Did everybody get everything they asked for? No, of course not. I, as ranking member, did not get everything I asked for, but neither did the chairman. I can assure my colleagues that the chairman has taken an evenhanded approach in dealing with more than 2,000 individual requests which we received.

Since the chairman of the subcommittee has already outlined the principal features of this bill, I take this opportunity to speak about a few specific items. First, I note that this bill increases funding for payment in lieu of taxes by $10 million over the current level. While the funding provided for PILT still leaves us a long way from the fully authorized amount, it is a dramatic improvement over the $45 million cut proposed by the President's budget request. These funds are vital. They are vital to all the counties where public lands have a presence, especially in the West where most of the public lands are located. Those counties struggle to provide education, law enforcement, and other services without an adequate tax base. I hope the administration will give greater consideration to the importance of this program as it assembles its fiscal year 2004 budget request. I make a footnote, saying as long as the American people have told us as policymakers that they want to retain those Federal lands everywhere across the country, then we must maintain and pay the taxes to support local services.

I will highlight the efforts Senator BYRD and I have made to increase funding for the operation of our National Parks. While the Americans for National Parks Campaign has turned a spotlight on the issue over the last several months, those who have served on the subcommittee for years know it is not a new problem. I view the increase of $35 million provided in this bill for park operations, an increase of $20 million over the budget request, as a continuation of this subcommittee's ongoing effort to provide adequate funds for our National Parks.

Finally, I will talk about forest fires. It has been odd to see the nightly newscasts and they are not reporting on a wildfire somewhere in the country. By now my colleagues are well aware that the 2002 fire season is on its way to being as costly and as damaging as the record-setting year 2000. The fact this is happening should come as no surprise. We knew the conditions in many areas of the West were the driest in recent memory. We knew that years of misguided forest management have left our forests with intolerably high fuel loads. The inevitable has happened. And it will continue to happen as the fire season progresses and as we meet the years ahead. The question is, what to do about it.

This bill fully funds the President's request for fire suppression, which is based on a 10-year average cost of firefighting. Unfortunately, using the 10-year average as a basis for budget requests no longer appears to be adequate. The 10-year average does not reflect the impact of inflation. It does not reflect the recent changes in firefighting practices associated with the national fire plan. And it does not reflect the impact of fire suppression costs of rapidly increasing housing development in the wildland urban interface.

We need to be working on a better model for projecting fire suppression budgets. Certainly, we need to do everything possible to control suppression costs through effective management and aggressive oversight, but at the end of the day we are going to have fires and we are going to have to fight them in many cases.

If our suppression budgets are consistently below the actual need, the Forest Service and the Department of the Interior will continually have to use their borrowing authority to cover fire costs. While this borrowing enables us to get the job done in terms of firefighting, repeated and extensive borrowing makes it difficult to plan and conduct regular programs that are funded from the accounts subject to the borrowing. Such programs include facility construction and maintenance, land acquisition, and research activities.

Ironically, repeated borrowing also makes it more difficult for the Forest Service and the Department of the Interior to execute their salvage and hazardous fuels reduction programs—the very programs that will help reduce fire suppression costs over the long term.

The Forest Service has already exhausted its fiscal year 2002 firefighting funds and has commenced borrowing from other programs. Current estimates indicate that the Forest Service may have to borrow more than $1 billion by the end of the fiscal year. The Department of the Interior may have to borrow $220 million. While I appreciate Senator STEVENS' and Senator BYRD's efforts to include $50 million for firefighting in the supplemental over OMB's objections—by the way, that amount does very little to address the problem; as such, I expect we will have an amendment to this bill to provide the emergency funds needed to pay for this year's firefighting costs. I certainly hope all my colleagues will support the amendment.

On a final note, I wish to echo Senator BYRD's comments regarding the overall funding levels in this bill. Due to the failure of the Senate to take up and pass a budget resolution, as it is supposed to do, we have no formal subcommittee allocation that is enforceable by a supermajority vote. Nevertheless, I concur with my chairman, Senator BYRD, and also with the ranking member of the full committee that we must enforce fiscal discipline as we go through this appropriations process.

I will join Senator BYRD in opposing amendments that propose to add non-emergency spending to this bill without being fully offset. And in considering such offsets, I do not believe either of the managers would look favorably on amendments that would duck the question of tradeoffs by using across-the-board cuts, reductions in travel, and other gimmicks. Agencies in this bill are already being asked to reduce their travel costs and absorb a portion of mandated pay increases. I expect Senator BYRD and I will oppose proposals to further squeeze agencies in such an indirect manner.

With that, I conclude by once again thanking Senator BYRD, my chairman, for his efforts in putting this bill together. I also thank his staff, led by Peter Kiefhaber, for their hard work and their willingness to work with my staff in assembling this bill.

I know they have worked long hours to get the bill to this stage. Even though we were on August break, and most of us in our home States, staff stayed here and worked on this legislation. I want to show that we appreciate their efforts.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have some technical amendments which have been cleared by the distinguished Senator, who is the ranking member. And they are technical. I do not plan to call up any amendment at this moment that is not purely technical.

The first thing I will do is to call up the substitute amendment, which is the work of our committee. The House bill is before the Senate. So what I seek to do now is call up the Senate bill as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], proposes an amendment numbered 4472.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORZINE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

AMENDMENT NO. 4473 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

(Purpose: To make permanent a provision relating to the National Business Center)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment will be to make permanent a provision previously carried in the Interior appropriations bill relating to the Interior Department's National Business Center. I am not talking about the substitute amendment which I just offered. I am talking about an amendment which I will shortly send to the desk, that, as I say, makes permanent a provision previously carried in the Interior appropriations bill relating to the Interior Department's National Business Center.

In January 2001, the National Business Center expanded its acquisition services capability. As part of its expanded mission, the Center now provides contracting support to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. The language that is being proposed by Mr. BURNS and myself allows the Center to continue to support the Defense Department's need for grants, cooperative agreements, and other transactions as authorized in the Defense Conversion, Reinvestment, and Transition Assistance Act of 1992.

This amendment will secure efficiencies in the area of procurement services and should be agreed to by the Senate.

I send to the desk an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) for himself and Mr. BURNS, proposes an amendment numbered 4473 to amendment No. 4472:

At the end of Title I, add the following new section:

"SEC. . Hereafter the Department of the Interior National Business Center may continue to enter into grants, cooperative agreements, and other transactions, under the Defense Conversion, Reinvestment, and Transition Assistance Act of 1992, and other related legislation."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on the amendment.

Mr. BURNS. It is all clear on this side. We are supporting it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4473) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4474 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send a technical amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD), for himself and Mr. BURNS, proposes an amendment numbered 4474 to amendment No. 4472:

On page 83, line 13, strike "$650,965,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$640,965,000".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment corrects an error with respect to the appropriation for the fossil energy account. On page 83, line 13, as the clerk has stated, the figure of $650,965,000 should read $640,965,000. The amendment that I sent to the desk on behalf of Mr. BURNS and myself makes this correction. I yield the floor so my distinguished counterpart may comment if he wishes.

Mr. BURNS. No comment here. We support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4474) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4475 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a final technical amendment which I shall offer at this moment corrects a typographical error in the bill. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD), proposes an amendment numbered 4475 to amendment No. 4472:

On page 26, line 15, strike "315" and insert in lieu thereof "301".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment, which is supported by my colleague, Mr. BURNS, as I say, corrects a typographical error in the bill. On page 26 of the Senate bill, under the section titled "Administrative Provisions," the National Park Service is authorized to purchase 315 passenger vehicles. That number should be 301.

The amendment makes that correction. And as I stated, I know that the distinguished ranking member is supportive of the proposal. I urge its adoption.

I yield the floor before the Senate votes on this amendment so that the distinguished Senator, who is the ranking member, may be recognized if he wishes to be recognized.

Mr. BURNS. We have no objection to this amendment, Mr. President. We fully support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4475) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no further technical amendments at this time. I do have an amendment, which I will not offer at this time, to provide funds to repay accounts from which funds were borrowed for emergency wildfire suppression. I will not offer that amendment at this point. I am sure there is going to be an amendment or amendments to the amendment. I shall withhold offering the amendment until the majority leader, majority whip, and other interested Senators—on both sides of the aisle—are back from their visit to the White House and at their desks.

Mr. President, does my colleague have something he wishes to say? If he does, I will sit down.

Mr. BURNS. I will say to my chairman that there will be some discussion. There is no doubt. It is only fair that the leadership be on the Hill whenever we take this up because it has high interest. Many of those funds that were borrowed for fire suppression are impacting other programs within the Department of Interior and the Forest Service. So we think it is a very important amendment. We are supportive and would hope the rest of the Senate would approve of it, too.

I think this is an area that warrants debate in the Senate so we know what we are spending the money for and how it impacts those lands where the U.S. Forest Service and the Department of Interior have a high presence.

Mr. President, I see no one else seeking the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, with the approval of my colleague, Senator CONRAD BURNS, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess awaiting the return of the majority leader and/or the minority leader—the return of those two leaders—and/or the whips on both sides.

There being no objection, at 10:11 a.m. the Senate recessed subject to the call of the Chair and reassembled at 11:39 a.m. when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mrs. CLINTON).

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 4480

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I am about to send to the desk an amendment. Before doing so, let me just briefly tell Senators what this amendment is about.

This amendment is being offered by myself, Senator BURNS, Senator STEVENS, and other Senators. It addresses the critical firefighting needs of the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management.

As many of our colleagues know, 2002 is turning out to be one of the most devastating fire seasons on record. Therefore, our amendment provides $825 million in emergency funding to reimburse the various accounts from which these agencies are currently borrowing. Of the amount provided, $636 million is allocated to the Forest Service and $189 million is allocated to the Department of the Interior. These are the exact amounts requested by the President just last week.

If anyone may think that this money is not needed, let me briefly state for the record, over the past 10 years the average number of acres burned by fire between January 1 and September 3 has been 3.2 million acres. This year—this year—however, the comparable number of acres burned is 6.3 million, almost twice the 10-year average.

This problem is much more than just numbers of acres burned. The devastation and destruction resulting from these fires is almost too much to comprehend. More than $1 billion will be spent on fighting fires, nearly 2,300 structures have been destroyed, and 20 brave firefighters have lost their lives. Clearly, this situation amounts to a domestic emergency of historic proportions.

I send to the desk, Madam President, an amendment, the amendment to which I have already referred, for the clerk's reading, after which the amendment will be open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD), for himself, Mr. BURNS, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. REID, Mr. DOMENICI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. KYL, and Mr. BAUCUS, proposes an amendment numbered 4480.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide funds to repay accounts from which funds were borrowed for emergency wildfire suppression)

On page 127, line 2, immediately following the "...," insert the following:

"TITLE IV—WILDLAND FIRE
EMERGENCY APPROPRIATIONS
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT
WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT

For necessary expenses to repay prior year advances from other appropriations transferred for emergency rehabilitation or wildfire suppression by the Department of the Interior, $189,000,000, to be available immediately upon enactment of this Act and to remain available until expended: Provided, that the Secretary of the Interior shall certify in writing to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations within 30 days of receiving funds under this title which appropriations accounts from which funds were advanced in fiscal year 2002 for emergency rehabilitation or wildfire suppression have been repaid and the amount of repayment: Provided, further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

RELATED AGENCY
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOREST SERVICE
WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT

For necessary expenses to repay prior year advances from appropriations accounts from which funds were borrowed for wildlife suppression, $636,000,000, to be available immediately upon enactment of this Act and to remain available until expended: Provided, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify in writing to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriation within 30 days of receiving funds under this title which appropriations accounts from which funds were advanced in fiscal year 2002 for wildfire suppression have been repaid and the amount or repayment: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Madam President, I am supportive of this amendment. I thank my chairman for offering this amendment. And nothing could be closer to the truth than the reason he stated for the appropriation of these funds.

It is not just that it is over 6 million acres this year; it is where those acres are located, as we have seen more burning this year in the forest and urban interface areas than we have ever seen. And they have been devastating. It has been in areas where it could have and should have taken more management skills to prevent the fires, but, nonetheless, that is the situation in which we find ourselves.

So I am very supportive of this amendment. I thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. As we debate this amendment today, I think the rest of the Senate will, too. Not only is there a shortfall in the funds that they had to borrow from in other programs that do other things that are very important within the Department of the Interior and the BLM, the Park Service, the Forest Service, but other programs suffered because of these devastating fires this year.

So I thank my chairman and look forward to working with him as we move this legislation through the Senate.

I yield the floor, Madam President.

Mr. BAUCUS. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request that I be added as a cosponsor of this amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Absolutely. I make that unanimous consent request, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I want to also indicate my strong support for the amendment just offered by Senator BYRD.

Like many States in the West and throughout the country, South Dakota has suffered this year, especially from fires that have devastated many parts of the Black Hills in particular. Thousands of acres have been lost. So, clearly, this legislation is needed.

I am pleased the administration recently indicated, for the first time, its willingness to support, on an emergency basis, additional funds for firefighting. So I am grateful to the distinguished chairman for his amendment. I strongly support it.

AMENDMENT NO. 4481 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4480

Madam President, I am mystified, however, that the administration, while willing to support, on an emergency basis, the funds necessary to fight fires, has, at least up until now, expressed opposition to providing assistance to those who are suffering from drought. In many cases, drought can be just as devastating economically as fires. The response on the part of the Federal Government is every bit as important as it is for fires. There appears to be a disconnect between those who support funding to fight fires and those who oppose funding for purposes of fighting drought.

So I intend to offer an amendment on behalf of Senators BAUCUS, JOHNSON, HARKIN, CARNAHAN, BURNS, DORGAN, NELSON of Nebraska, STABENOW, LEVIN, CLINTON, LINCOLN, CONRAD, WELLSTONE, DAYTON, SCHUMER, and REID. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota, [Mr. DASCHLE], for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. HARKIN, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. BURNS, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. LEVIN, Mrs. CLINTON, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. SCHUMER, and Mr. REID proposes an amendment numbered 4481 to amendment No. 4480.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide emergency disaster assistance to agricultural producers)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

TITLE —EMERGENCY AGRICULTURAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 01. CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 508(b)(7) of the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1508(b)(7)), the Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this title as the “Secretary”) shall use such sums as are necessary of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to make emergency financial assistance authorized under this section available to producers on a farm that have incurred qualifying crop losses for the 2001 or 2002 crop due to damaging weather or related condition, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) DESIGNATION.—The entire amount made available under this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement under sections 251(b)(2)(A) and 252(e) of that Act (2 U.S.C. 901(b)(2)(A), 902(e)).

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, would the distinguished majority leader add my name to the list of Senators who are cosponsors of this measure?

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I would be happy to add the name of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, as a cosponsor. I ask unanimous consent that he be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, first of all, let me also express publicly my appreciation to Senator BYRD for his accommodation of my schedule this morning. He was prepared to offer his amendment some time ago and withheld doing so in order to accommodate my schedule. As always, he is very courteous, and has been very helpful to me in this case. I appreciate his cooperation.

Madam President, when the Senate passed the farm bill 202 days ago, we agreed, overwhelmingly, to include assistance for farmers and ranchers who suffered serious economic losses as a result of natural disasters during the crop-year of last year. Madam President, 69 Senators—Republicans and Democrats—voted to include that assistance in the farm bill.

The administration at that time, and Republican House leaders, objected. In conference, they threatened to block any farm bill from passing unless we removed the natural disaster assistance for this year. They said they would block all assistance for farmers and ranchers unless we agreed to drop disaster assistance.

So, reluctantly, we agreed. But we said, when the farm bill passed, that the need for disaster assistance for farmers and ranchers would not go away. It would only get worse, and we would have to revisit the issue. That is what we are doing once again today.

Our amendment is simple and straightforward. It does not create a new program. All it does is fund existing crop loss and livestock assistance programs for this year and last year. It does, in other words, exactly what 69 Senators agreed to do 202 days ago.

There are some who said we should not spend another dollar on agriculture. They say the new farm bill is more than generous. I want to make an important distinction. The new farm bill covers loss due to low prices. It does not cover losses due to natural disasters. Farmers and ranchers all across America are suffering staggering losses due to natural disasters.

In fact, in yesterday's Wall Street Journal there was a report that indicated the current drought may be the most expensive in all of U.S. history.

According to the Journal:

The U.S. may be looking at the most expensive drought in United States history, inflicting economic damage far beyond the Farm Belt.

In South Dakota, the drought is costing farmers upwards of $5 million a day. All told, the impact on my State alone is estimated to be $1.8 billion to agriculture and rural business. Things are getting worse by the day. Some counties have had less rain this year than they had in 1936, at the height of the Dust Bowl.

For as long as I can remember, the Congress has agreed that disaster relief constitutes an emergency. Disaster relief for wildfires, tornadoes, floods, or any other natural disaster is truly an emergency. It is astounding to me now that during what may be the most serious of all droughts we have had in U.S.

history, some people would want to change that. They would say that farmers and ranchers don't need or don't deserve disaster assistance. They are wrong.

The farm bill doesn't include funds to help farmers and ranchers weather this unprecedented set of circumstances. Unless we act, many of them simply will not survive.

We should not discriminate against those who are hurting simply because of the nature of the disaster. Whether it is caused by floods or droughts or wildfires, whether it devastates Texas or South Dakota or any other State, an emergency is an emergency. Sixty-nine of us recognized that fundamental fact 202 days ago. I urge my colleagues to reaffirm it as we consider this amendment.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 4481, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, may I ask the distinguished majority leader: The leader and the assistant leader and the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. BURNS, Mr. BAUCUS, and I earlier had a discussion to the extent that the offeror, the author of the amendment, Mr. DASCHLE, would modify the amendment to make it read that the funds would be available in fiscal year 2002 and that the amount would be charged to the Committee on Agriculture, the authorizing committee. Are these provisions included in the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. If I could respond to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, I would confirm that the issues raised just now by the distinguished Senator are ones to which we have agreed. Obviously, we have to incorporate the appropriate language in order to accommodate that agreement. It is my intention to do so. At some point, I will ask unanimous consent that the amendment be so modified to accommodate those requests.

Let me reiterate, they would involve charging whatever funds may be used against the Agriculture Committee. I would draw a distinction between that implication or that requirement and any implication that that would entail using funds from the recently passed farm bill. The Congressional Budget Office has indicated we are not able to do that, to draw funds from the farm bill, per se. But none of us has any objection to charging the funds against the committee itself.

Let me also say, we certainly have no objection to ensuring that those funds are taken from the fiscal year 2002 budget allocation and not the 2003.

So we certainly would be in agreement with both recommendations and would be offering modifying language when we have it. I understand the language is now at the desk. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be so modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, as I understand it, the author of the amendment needs no consent to modify his amendment at this point, no action having been taken on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DASCHLE. I simply would then modify my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 4481), as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

TITLE —EMERGENCY AGRICULTURAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 01. CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I think finally we are here. Finally we will pass agricultural disaster assistance which is so needed by many farmers and ranchers throughout our country. The amendment now pending is the amendment I offered which got 69 votes just 200 days ago. It has been modified.

My colleague, Senator BURNS, and I have modified the amendment so it applies to years 2001 and 2002—that is, to crop losses and livestock losses in both those years—whereas the earlier amendment I offered covered losses only in the year 2001. This has been a devastating year, in addition to 2001 being a devastating year.

Mother Nature works in strange ways. Some parts of America are hit in some years rather than others. It doesn't rain in some parts of our country in some years, whereas it does in others. That is true within States. Last year was worse for my State of Montana, and this year is a little bit better, but not a lot.

For Montana, it is not just 2 years of drought, it is successive years of drought. It is 4 or more years depending upon where you are located in my State. I say that not only because of the obvious implication that there are 4 years of farmers who are not producing the quality or quantity of crops that they should, but also because of the perverse way crop insurance works. I point this out to my colleagues who may not be as steeped in agricultural policy as others.

I ask unanimous consent, even though we will get into morning business, that I be allowed to continue as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. The perverse operation of crop insurance is that with each successive year's drought, premiums rise but coverage decreases. That is how crop insurance works; namely, premiums rise during years of droughts and coverage declines.

Some might ask, why do we need agricultural disaster assistance when we have Federal crop insurance? That is a good point. Federal crop insurance is helpful. Federal crop insurance is widely available in most parts of the country. The fact is, crop insurance today provides less coverage than is needed because of the perverse effect of the operation of the program and does not negate the need to provide natural disaster.

Again, to repeat, in successive years of drought, premiums that farmers pay for Federal crop insurance rise and the coverage continues to decline with each year that passes during a natural disaster. That is the way it works because farmers have less of production history, less acreage in a prior year that is available.

Add to that, when you have successive years of drought, it might rain this year, as it has in some parts of my State, but that is just the surface soil that is given moisture. It is the subsurface soil down 1, 2, 3 feet that is parched. It is so dry. A lot of crops have roots that go deeper. In addition, very dry subsurface soil has an effect on the moisture content at the surface. So there are many reasons this has just mounted.

In 1996—I can only speak for Montana; I cannot speak as authoritatively for other States—before these successive years of drought began, farmers received almost $1 billion in cash receipts from wheat; $847 million, to be precise. Last year, 5 years into the drought, Montana received only $317 million in cash receipts—that is a 62-percent decline—just because of the drought.

The same is true with livestock. We are talking about not only crop assistance but also livestock because in drought years feed prices are extremely high and ranchers are liquidating their herds. The range is in poor condition. It just adds up and has a very detrimental cumulative effect.

Agriculture is more than 50 percent of my State's economy. It is truly the backbone of our State's economy. So a drought affects not only farmers and ranchers specifically, but it affects communities, it affects schools and businesses, because when farmers don't have a crop, what happens? They are not buying seed, they are not buying fertilizer, not buying fuel, not buying all the staples that go into agriculture.

When that happens, clearly, the towns begin to suffer dramatically. It affects our schools and the income available to schools. It affects the psychology of the communities. More than that, it affects the number of people who are willing to stay and fight and live in those communities.

Many communities in Montana are losing population. If we don't get this agricultural disaster assistance, I can guarantee you that the failure is going to hasten the decline of the populations in many parts of our country. I can speak personally for parts of my State of Montana.

The leader made an excellent point a few minutes ago, which is that we passed a farm bill that addressed economic assistance for farmers. It is needed because the earlier farm program, "freedom to fail" was just that; it hurt farmers. There was no safety net. Farmers fell through the cracks and holes in the safety net. We didn't have a basic underpinning for people. Not only was it necessary for farmers to have that underpinning, but I want to remind my colleagues that we have a big battle with other countries that support their farmers much more than America supports its farmers.

I also might point out an interesting statistic, which is that agricultural trade barriers worldwide average about 60 percent. Manufacturing trade barriers and tariffs average about 5 percent. We Americans have very few barriers to agricultural trade. There are some commodities, such as peanuts and sugar, that have some assistance, but when it comes to the basic commodities of wheat and barley, we have virtually no protective subsidies. We have no trade barriers to help our industries, whereas, as I mentioned before, the average agricultural trade barrier worldwide is 60 percent. So, clearly, we have to help our people when other countries are helping theirs so much more than we are.

Second, in 1975, the European Union was the largest net importer of agricultural products. They didn't like that, so they started doing something about that. They decided to enact various measures within Europe, price levies, agricultural export subsidies, and similar measures. By 1985, Europe was the largest net exporter of agricultural products. That was a big turnaround in 10 years because of the degree to which they were protecting their producers.

Eighty-two percent or eighty-six percent of the world's agricultural export subsidies are European Union. Their agricultural export subsidies are about 85 percent of the world's agricultural export subsidies. What are America's? Maybe 2 percent. Our Export Enhancement Program is just peanuts compared with what the Europeans do. So we have to fight and we have to help our farmers. The farm bill was to help our farmers.

We are talking today about something totally different. What is it? We are not talking about assistance for low prices, we are talking about disaster assistance. When there are tornadoes, our country responds with disaster assistance. When there are floods, our country responds with disaster assistance. We had the Trade Towers tragedy—an unspeakable tragedy—and our country responded to that disaster. We are simply stating—all of us who are sponsoring this amendment—in fact, I was the original author of this amendment along with Senator BURNS. We are saying here is another disaster, but not because of a tornado, earthquake, or floods, but because of the drought, people need help. There is no reason that drought should play by a different set of rules than other natural disasters.

We have the opportunity today to keep our rural communities and economies alive. Rural America is resilient. And like them, I will not give up. Thousands of people are suffering from the relentless drought. They deserve emergency agricultural assistance and I will continue to fight until we are successful.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. It is long overdue and desperately needed.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will be brief. I know others want to speak.

I think I speak for the Presiding Officer, given what he has seen in South Dakota. Senator DASCHLE also talked about the drought. Let me make this appeal to my colleagues. In northwestern Minnesota, there are 17 counties that have been declared Federal disasters. In our case, it is the flooding. I cannot remember more emotional gatherings I have ever been to since I have been in the Senate. We have had a lot of this kind of flooding, and I have been in towns devastated by tornadoes.

I make this appeal to my colleagues. Never in the years I have been a Senator—and I will be finishing up my 12th year—have I voted against disaster assistance for any community anywhere in the United States of America, whether it is tornadoes, hurricanes, fire, drought, or whether it is flooding. I believe this is a perfect example of there but for the grace of God go I. The devastation to so much rich farmland in Minnesota and to those farmers and these communities is not because people have been bad managers. Nobody asked for this. As Senator DASCHLE said, we are not talking about counter-cyclical income for low prices; we are talking about disaster relief.

So I will say to every Senator, Democrat and Republican, we hope we will have your support. This is what we do as a community. This is what we do as a national community. We provide help to people. I know the President has said no to this. I wish he would take another position. But I really believe Senators understand full well that this kind of disaster can happen to any community in any one of our States, and I think this is a time when we really should come together, a time when we become a community to help communities.

I am so pleased that this amendment is on the floor. I know we are soon going to go back to the homeland defense bill, but tomorrow we will be back on this amendment. Tomorrow, there will be an up-or-down vote. Tomorrow, I hope Senators will vote for this. Right now, for me, as a Senator from Minnesota, it is a priority to get help to these people. A lot of farmers and a lot of people in northwestern Minnesota really need the help. Please provide that help.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 1 hour designated for morning business begin now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISASTER RELIEF

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me follow the remarks of my colleague from Minnesota, Senator WELLSTONE, and say as a cosponsor of this disaster relief that I have never voted against a proposal to help people in this country who have suffered a disaster. There are many kinds of disasters that people suffer, and in each and every case I have been pleased to be a part of this Congress to say to them you are not alone, the rest of the country wishes to help. It is an important thing to do.

Disaster, in this case, is spelled in part of my State by a drought that is devastating. It means those who have invested their lives and fortunes to put seeds into the ground, hoping to raise a crop and to have some income with which to raise a family, have discovered that drought has killed their crop.

There is nothing to harvest. There is nothing left. In other parts of the State, flooding has prevented fields from being planted. Yes, we ought to respond to this in a positive way.

I support the efforts of Senators DASCHLE and BAUCUS and JOHNSON of South Dakota, WELLSTONE, and others, and I am happy to be a cosponsor of the bill.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I intend to put into the RECORD a letter I sent to President Bush several weeks ago on the subject of having an economic summit meeting.

I note that the President had a forum of some type in Crawford, TX, when he invited people who agreed with his fiscal policy to talk about how well the administration's policies are working.

I believe we have significant economic difficulties in this country. The Federal budget deficits now continue to skyrocket.

We have a budget that does not add up, a fiscal policy that does not make much sense. I think we ought to have an economic summit at which people of varying opinions come together and have a competition of ideas about what works and what does not, so that we can find ways to put our country back on track.

I hope the President convenes this much-needed economic summit.

(Mr. WELLSTONE assumed the chair.)

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to comment on one additional matter. I intend to hold some hearings in the Commerce subcommittee that I chair, on the issue of corporate responsibility.

We recently passed legislation dealing with corporate responsibility in the Senate. It was subsequently signed by the President. I supported that legislation, but I thought that it could be improved in some areas.

During Senate debate, I tried to offer an amendment dealing with the issue of bankruptcy, that called for recovery of profits by top executives of companies that went bankrupt. The amendment was blocked by my colleague, the Senator from Texas, who kept me from offering it over several days. I was not able to offer that amendment on the bill, but I am going to continue to push it.

My point is this: As corporations go bankrupt and as those CEOs take increasing amounts of money out of corporations in bonus payments and incentive payments prior to bankruptcy, I think there ought to be a mechanism for disgorgement or recapture of that money for the benefit of other investors who lost their shirts and the employees who lost their jobs. I believe this idea would have had wide support in the Senate, but I could not get it done because it was blocked by the Senator from Texas.

Well, the Financial Times has done a study and written an article to which I want to call attention. It is titled "The Survivors Who Left All the Way to the Bank." The Financial Times found that in the 25 largest companies that went bankrupt since January of 2001, there were 208 top executives who were paid a total of $3.3 billion in salaries, bonuses, and incentive payments.

Think of that. As these publicly traded companies were going down the tubes and into bankruptcy, executives were busy taking out massive sums—$933 million from one; $290 million from another; $299 million from another, just to give a few examples.

I would like one good reason anybody has for providing a bonus or incentive payment to any executive prior to the company filing bankruptcy—just one good reason. But there is not one. That money ought to be recaptured. There ought to be what is called a disgorgement or recapture or clawback. That money ought to be used to reimburse investors who lost their shirts and employees who lost their jobs.

I am going to hold a hearing about this in my subcommittee. We are going to look into situations like that of Enron. We have already had some testimony in this regard in my subcommittee, relating to bonuses paid at Enron. It turns out that Enron paid $55 million to people at the top of the corporation to commit to stay 90 days as employees following bankruptcy. Some people got bonuses of $1 million, some of half a million dollars. I think that is nuts.

The investors get ripped by losing their shirts, losing their investments, and a few people inside the companies that went into bankruptcy walk away with pockets full of gold from the treasuries of these corporations. It ought not happen. It is just plain wrong.

Yet this was not dealt with by the corporate responsibility legislation. Why? Because I was blocked from offering my amendment.

If I had been able to offer my amendment and had gotten a vote on it, we would have gotten a mechanism for recapture and disgorgement. We would have a law that says that you cannot walk away from a corporation you took into bankruptcy with $100 million in your own bank account.

So there is unfinished business on corporate responsibility. We are going to have votes on this issue of bankruptcy and recapture of ill-gotten gains.

I am also going to be working on the issue of inversions. I know the Presiding Officer cares a lot about that issue, which involves corporations deciding they want to renounce their U.S. citizenship. Why? Because they want to become citizens of tax havens like Bermuda, so they can save on their U.S. tax bill. Shame on them. Inversion, my eye.

We ought not have corporations renouncing their American citizenship out of sheer greed. I am going to offer legislation on that issue as well.

So we have some unfinished business on corporate responsibility. Nobody ought to think the bill we passed is a cure-all. It addresses the problem of corporate irresponsibility in a constructive and positive way, but it is incomplete and there are other issues yet to be addressed. I, for one, intend to hold hearings and offer amendments on this issue. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority whip is recognized.

Mr. REID. Will the Chair advise the Senator when morning business started?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business started at 12:07 p.m.

Mr. REID. Under the control of Senator KENNEDY, or his designee, we have the first half hour until 12:37 p.m.; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Dakota be recognized for 5 minutes, and following that, the Senator from Nebraska be recognized for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from South Dakota.

DROUGHT RELIEF

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of an amendment which I have cosponsored which provides direct and immediate emergency aid to the nation's farmers and ranchers coping with a drought of devastating proportions. Mr. President, recently President Bush visited my home State of South Dakota at Mount Rushmore. He was met with great courtesy, respect, and hospitality which we always extend to Presidents of either political party. I was there, along with my wife, to greet the President at Mount Rushmore. We are proud of our State and always pleased to have an opportunity to show it off.

There was a great deal that the President said in South Dakota on which I could agree. There are a number of areas of common ground on which we can work together as Americans.

I have to say, however, that I was profoundly disappointed that the President chose at that time to express his opposition to emergency drought relief for farmers and ranchers in my State all across America. Some 40 States have been struck to some degree or another by this relentless drought.

There are areas in my State in dire circumstances. We have lost almost $2 billion in the South Dakota economy over the course of this past year, and in our small State, that is an enormous hit. I have visited farmers and ranchers across my State who detail with great pain and emotion the problems they're being forced to cope with due to this drought.

I recently was in Philip and Faith, SD. The pastures look like the surface of the Moon. There is no vegetation at all. I talked to Gary Vance, the owner of the Faith livestock auction barn who indicated to me that a year ago, over a 2-month period, they sold 1,200 cattle. Over 2 months this summer they sold over 12,000 cattle as people continued to liquidate their herds, including breeding stock, simply having to get out of the business altogether. Corn cannot be cut for silage, soybeans are lying in the dust, and pastures are simply patches of dirt at this point. It is having a devastating impact.

As the Senator from North Dakota indicated, I have always been supportive of emergency aid in circumstances where people have been struck by forces of nature, whether it is hurricanes in Florida or earthquakes in California. I do not begrudge providing money to New York and other places where we had floods, hurricanes, and tornadoes.

I find it striking that some are arguing to set a new precedent whereby this one sector of the economy, the agricultural sector, is being asked to play by a different rule. Those suggesting this new precedent believe we can take money out of the existing farm program to deal with a natural disaster. The farm bill was never designed to address problems of natural disasters. By their very nature, droughts and floods are unpredictable. They occur some years; some years they do not. Some years, their scope is of one kind; others, another. I find it hard to believe the administration has taken this position while at the same time talking about an economic stimulus package.

I can think of few things that could be more stimulating to the economy in our part of the country other than a drought bill to provide some relief to get these people through the winter. Right now, in too many instances livestock producers have no feed, they have no water. They are not going to make it through the winter. They are selling their herds off at a $250-a-head loss. These pastures are not going to recover, in some instances, for years. This is an enormous hit, and it is not just the farmers and ranchers, it is mainstream business. It is the entire fabric of the economy of South Dakota that is suffering mightily, as it is in so many other States.

In the past, we have always dealt with this on an emergency basis. Presidents of both political parties, President Bush Sr., and this President, when he was Governor of Texas, asked for drought relief on an emergency basis in his State. So it seems hard to believe we find ourselves in this circumstance where the Senate passed drought relief for the 2001 year over 6 months ago that was defeated and pulled out of the farm bill by colleagues in the House. The White House expressed opposition to it, some 200 days ago.

We attempted to put drought relief in the supplemental appropriations bill but again ran into resistance. Now we are looking at the 2003 fiscal year beginning on October 1. Things are delayed already, I don't think we can afford to wait, we must enact emergency relief now. There are some who talk about finding the money within the farm bill, within the LDP and the countercyclical payment money that will not be used. The Congressional Budget Office indicates to us there is no such fund, there is no such $5 billion lying around in the farm program waiting to be used, and we would not know what the scope of the funding for those programs would be until September of 2003 in any event.

Frankly, we have producers who needed help months ago who have to make wrenching decisions right now relative to whether they are going to make it through the winter. They will have to liquidate everything they have in order to survive in too many instances. Too many young producers are being chased out of the business altogether. Those most vulnerable, those least capitalized, tend to be among the youngest. We are at risk of losing an entire generation of farmers, ranchers, school board members, and church leaders in rural America if something is not done to provide meaningful and immediate relief.

There is great urgency to this, and I hope we can find the bipartisan support to pass the comprehensive drought relief bill in these coming days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2800 to say that during the August break, when we all went home, what a pleasant experience it was to go home, except that some of what I saw during those days in August in Nebraska were not pleasant experiences. The message from our farmers and ranchers in Nebraska is that the drought is driving them out of their business and running them out of agriculture.

As a part of my trip back to Nebraska, I hosted a Senate Agriculture Committee hearing in Grand Island, and I thought it might be important to report back what I heard from many of our farmers and ranchers in Nebraska.

Al Davis, a rancher from Hyannis, NE, in the middle of the sand hills, told me his ranch has not had any measurable precipitation since July 6—a month and a half earlier.

For 60 days, Art Duvall's farm in Ord had no measurable rainfall, and the McCook Daily Gazette, my hometown paper which I delivered as a young boy, reported that as of the date of the hearing, that area had had only 8 inches of rain this year and that there will be 35 days this summer with temperatures of 100 degrees or more, approaching the record set during the Dust Bowl years.

I visited Randy Peters' farm, a farm that has been in the Peters family since 1921, where on many occasions as a young boy, with my father, I hunted pheasants. So I am familiar with the farm. Since 1921, they have had a crop every year—some good years, some bad years, but they had a crop. This year, there will be no crop. The corn will be left standing, not even good for silage, not having any value except maybe if we get any kind of snowfall this winter, maybe to catch a little snow and keep it for moisture for the future.

When we had TV cameras to take a look at how bad the ears of corn were, we had to walk halfway through the field to find an ear of corn big enough to shuck so we could peel back the husks and have people take a look at the fact that there were no kernels of corn on that ear.

I also heard during the hearing the details regarding the sale of livestock. As the Senator from South Dakota stated about selling off herds and recognizing that next year may not be any better, farmers may need to sort of hedge their bet a bit and get rid of their herds in case the high cost of hay—if it is available—will drive up the cost of production to the point where they lose more on every head of cattle that they sell rather than recouping any losses.

Witnesses testified that much of the nonirrigated crop in large sections of the State would be a total loss this year, after 2 previous years that had been bad crop years in their own right. Witness after witness testified that they need the kind of assistance the Federal Government would not think twice about giving if Nebraska had been struck by a hurricane.

As Merlyn Carlson, the director of agriculture for the State of Nebraska, said, agricultural producers, farmers, need two things: Rain and money.

Well, we cannot do anything about the rain. Even if we could, the rain will come too late this year to protect against the problems that are currently being experienced. It will be great for next year but not for this year.

At this point, I am sure some of our colleagues would bring up the subject of offsets. That certainly has been raised by the administration and by many of our colleagues. There are those who believe that any disaster relief should be funded only by cuts in future farm bill programs. I disagree. There is no reason to treat disaster relief differently for rural areas struck by drought than we would in other areas struck by another kind of natural disaster. Moreover, if we wait for offsets, we will delay relief.

One thing I have learned during my short time in the Senate is that every program and every idea has a constituency, and if one Member of Congress attempts to defund a program for the benefit of another, there will be a fight. We cannot afford to waste time having a floor fight over offsets.

Throughout the hearing, witnesses asked for relief without delay. At one point, I asked a panel, consisting of representatives of the National Corn Growers Association, the American Corn Growers Association, the Nebraska Wheat Board, the National Grain Sorghum Producers, and the Nebraska Corn Growers Association, if they favored a delay in relief if offsetting costs could be found. Without exception, they did not. They recognized that, in fact, if aid will be of any assistance, it must be delivered as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. I urge our colleagues to move forward on this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. How much time does Senator KENNEDY have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes, 20 seconds.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that Senator KENNEDY be recognized as in morning business for an additional 5 minutes and the minority also have an additional 5 minutes for morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts.

NO CHILD LEFT BEHIND

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, for families across this country who have school-age children, they have been involved over the period of these recent days and weeks preparing their children to attend, by and large, the public schools of our country. Over 90 percent of the children in this country go to the public schools. A little less than 10 percent go to private schools.

Over these last several months, we have had, with President Bush, a bipartisan effort which resulted in what was called the "No Child Left Behind Act." That legislation recognized that what is really needed for the neediest children in this country is school reform. But we also need investment, school reform and increased resources.

For a long time, the Title I program was criticized because it provided resources without really providing the kind of accountability that is so important. So there was a bipartisan effort to provide for that kind of accountability.

Now as parents are seeing their children going back to school and they are asking whether the Congress and this administration are meeting their responsibility. Because in that legislation, we are holding accountable the children that were going through school. We are holding accountable the schools. We are holding accountable teachers.

I was asked over the recent month of August as I went around Massachusetts, is: What is going to be the administration's response to the children being left behind with the budget that the administration recommended to the Congress for funding of No Child Left Behind? Will politicians be accountable? There are 10.3 million children who fall into what we call the Title I category. Over 6 million of those children are going to be left behind under the administration's budget. We do not expect that money in and of itself to be the answer to all of the problems, but it is a pretty good indication of the priorities of a nation and the priorities of an administration. And this chart is a pretty clear indication of the recent history of increased funding for education. We are talking her about the total education budget. In 1997, a 16 percent increase; 12 percent in 1998; 12 percent in 1999; 6 percent in the year 2000; 19 percent in 2001; and 16 percent in 2002. However, it is only 2.8 percent under this administration's budget, the lowest we have seen over the last 7 years.

Again, money is not everything, but we did make a commitment to the parents, to the families, to the schools. There is tough criteria for all of those groups.

We have seen, in the efforts made by Senator HARKIN in the Appropriations Committee, the recommendation that it will be higher than this program. It will be some $4.2 billion, and it will raise this percentage up to about 6 percent. 2.8 percent is the recommendation that is being made by our Republican friends in the House of Representatives. By and large, the best judgment we have is that this will be the figure coming from the House, and we will be somewhat above, and the conference will come out lower, certainly, than what we have seen in recent years.

What has resulted from this—from the fact that we have not seen adequate funding of the program? We recognize in the No Child Left Behind Act that one of the most important necessities is a well-qualified teacher in every classroom in the country. There is virtually no increase in funding for teacher training. So the 18,000 teachers that would have been trained if there had been a cost of living increase will not receive the training.

Mr. President, 20,000 students will be cut from the college Work-Study Program; 25,000 limited-English-proficient children cut from the Federal bilingual program; 33,000 children cut from after-school programs; there is virtually no increase in the Pell grants; and there is no increase in student loans.

What has the administration requested of the Congress? Why do I take a few moments of the Senate time today? I want to point out what is happening in this debate regarding funding of education because tomorrow in the House of Representatives, they will mark up a recommendation by this administration for $4 billion in new funding for private school vouchers. We understand, this is for private schools, 10 percent of the education, $4 billion. Yet just 2.8 percent increase for the public schools, where 90 percent of the children go.

There are a number of reasons we should be concerned. I think most of us believe that we should not be taking scarce funds from the public school children and putting them into private schools. That is in effect what this is doing. If we had the $4 billion, we would be able to increase the total number of poor children to be covered under the Title I program to about two-thirds of those that are being left behind this year. However, the administration said no; we will have $4 billion over a 5-year period to be used for the private schools, for just 10 percent of the children.

The reason we raise this issue is in case we have these resources again, we will have an opportunity, hopefully, to debate this, and it ought to be directed toward the public school system.

But beyond that, some of the things that concern us is that with the $4 billion, there is virtually no requirement that we have accountability. The administration made a great deal about accountability, to make sure that we know where the money is invested, what the results will be on the standardized systems to be able to tell if children are progressing. In my own State of Massachusetts, we have seen important progress where we have had accountability and support, including the recent announcement of the MCAS results in the past week, in which we have seen continued progress in math and continued progress made in English. Not all the problems are resolved, and there are still painful problems in terms of disparity, but we have seen progress made because of accountability.

The administration has talked about accountability. But for their $4 billion, there is no accountability to any schools to ensure that they do what all the public schools do, and that is, to have the examinations.

There is no accountability to ensure that private schools accept all the children. In the public school system there has to be acceptance of all of the children, but the private schools do not have to do that.

In private schools, there is no accountability to ensure teachers will be highly qualified teachers. We wrote in that legislation that in a 4-year period there will be highly qualified teachers in the classrooms. We fund a variety of programs regarding recruitment, training, and retention, and we give maximum flexibility to local communities to be able to do that. But there is no requirement with that $4 billion that they use those funds for highly qualified teachers in the classrooms. And there is no requirement to give the parents the critical information they need and which we have insured under this legislation.

So we are puzzled. We heard both the President and our good friends on the other side saying accountability was the key element. We agree that was enormously important—we are going to have accountability and resources. However, now we have the administration coming back with $4 billion more. Instead of allocating that to the 90 percent of the schools that will train the children of America, the public school systems which returned to school this past week—no, they will use that money, the $4 billion, in the private schools for vouchers. They have basically retreated on each and every one of these principles. It seems a very important mistake and one which we will have the opportunity, hopefully, to debate.

With those resources, if the Bush budget took that $4 billion in new funding for private schools over 5 years along with the cut in public schools, had that $4 billion been available for public schools, it would mean the upgrading of the skills of 1 million teachers across this country. It would upgrade the skills of 1 million teachers. You could provide 5.2 million more children with afterschool learning opportunities.

I just point out about the afterschool programs, because of all of the Federal programs that are out there that go through the process and are considered to be quality programs, when they get in line for the funding, the afterschool programs are No. 1. Do we understand that? There is a greater need, in terms of limited resources for these programs, than for any other Federal program. People understand that if you are going to provide afterschool programs and supplementary services for the children who need them, this is the way to try to do it. We are seeing the results of success academically as well as in terms of the social progress the children have made.

This is what you would be able to do. You could provide 5.2 million more children with afterschool learning opportunities. You could provide a Pell Grant to 500,000 more college students—those students who are able, gifted, talented, motivated young people whose parents have limited resources and income. They will not go on to college because they are not eligible for the Pell grants. With these resources, 5,000,000 more children would receive increased college aid.

As we continue this debate and discussion about funding education, it is enormously important that the American people understand whose side we are on. We on this side of the aisle believe very strongly that with scarce resources in our budget, these resources ought to be used to provide more highly qualified teachers in every classroom, smaller class sizes, afterschool programs, supplementary services, and information to parents so they know what is happening in those schools—all of those for the children in this country. We believe that is where the needs are. That is what we ought to be doing with scarce resources, not siphoning off $4 billion for the 10 percent of children who are attending private schools.

We will have an opportunity, when this comes before the Senate, to debate it further. But we want the parents of children going to public schools, who are facing increasing pressure—as we have seen all across this country as States have cut back in support and help to local communities, increasing the size of their classes, reducing the afterschool programs, cutting out a number of subjects such as music programs, and cutting back on the number of teachers' aides and teachers' assistants—to know that we understand this is not a time to abandon our public schools. This is a time to invest in our future.

One final point. We have had a great deal of discussion and debate about national security and national defense. I would like to make the point that ensuring that we are going to have well-qualified children in schools that are going to meet standards is an essential aspect of our national security and national defense. And we should not shortchange that investment any more than we do our Defense Department.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, for the last few moments I had the opportunity to listen to the Senator from Massachusetts. Of course, he is well known for his dedication to public education in this country. I applaud him for that.

I also want to recognize a President who has seen public education in its current condition to be an issue on which to speak out and on which to lead. And while the private school and the voucher may be criticized, we are creating a dynamic, now, in the marketplace of education, that means the public schools are going to have to compete a little more. In that competition, they will dramatically improve.

The condition for educating young people, in my opinion—and I think it is a growing opinion in America—will rapidly increase.

DROUGHT AND FIRE

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I did not come to the floor this afternoon to speak to education. I came to the floor today to talk about what I saw on the Weather Channel this morning across the Great Basin West, the Weather Channel that spoke of a hot weather pattern that permeates the Great Basin West, that continues to allow it to be dry, and, as a result of the drought conditions, we have a unique weakness in the West this summer that tragically has been played out for a good number of years and will be played out into the future.

The western skies are full of smoke today. They are full of smoke from forest fires that started burning in mid-June on the great Rocky Mountain front of the Colorado and down into the southwestern mountains of Arizona. To date, we have seen a fire scenario on our forested public lands that is almost unprecedented in the history of the U.S. Forest Service and U.S. Forest Service management.

Today, as I speak, as a result of public policy and as a result of the drought conditions in the West, we have seen over 6.3 million acres of public land burned. That 6.3 million acres is not a record, but it is without question a historic record when you compare it with the averages of the kinds of public lands we have seen burned over the last good number of decades.

We watched what happened in Arizona earlier this year when nearly 700,000 acres were burned and thousands of homes were lost and lives were lost. Then, during the August recess while all of us were back in our States, we watched the firestorm that struck the eastern slopes of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon. In the State of Oregon, almost a million acres of land have burned.

In the State of California, as I speak, 3 fires are burning and over 12,000 acres have been burned.

In the State of Colorado, over a half-million acres have been burned.

That is a tragedy, without question. Wildlife habitat, watershed, has been destroyed at almost an unprecedented rate. Watershed for urban areas, habitat for endangered species—gone, up in smoke. There is nothing but a pile of ashes today because those fires were so hot, so penetrating, so intense, that they were unlike almost any other kind of fire we have seen on our public lands.

Why has that happened? What am I talking about? Is this unprecedented?

Or is fire simply natural in our forest systems? Fire is a natural element in our forest systems. But what we are seeing today—because largely we took fire out of the ecosystems of our forests 70 years ago—is that these are very much abnormal fires, burning hotter than ever, burning entire stands, burning the ground to such an extent that we are caramelizing the soil and burning the humus out of it. By so doing, we are disallowing the ability of those forests to rejuvenate as they would under a reasonably normal scenario.

Why is this happening? It is happening because of public policy, because of an attitude that was held right here in this Senate that has crafted public policy over the last several decades that not only took fire out of the forests but didn't allow active management in the forest to replace what fire would have otherwise accomplished.

As you know, in the Black Hills of South Dakota you have had this kind of situation. In fact, the Presiding Officer and his colleague, Senator DASCHLE, have felt the situation so intense and so risky of ecosystems, of timber, of wildlife habitat, of human dwellings and all of that, that you chose to act. I think you acted in a relatively appropriate way to recognize the need for immediate action that would not deny the thinning and the cleaning and the fuel reduction that needed to go on in those forests.

I chaired the forest subcommittee for 5 or 6 years here in the Senate. We have spent a lot of time looking at this issue, trying to deal with this issue—largely to no avail.

In the early 1980s, a group of forest scientists met in Sun Valley, ID, for a national review of the health of our forested lands. At that time, 1981 or 1982, I believe, those forest scientists, with no bias, simply made the statement that the public forests of the Great Basin West were sick, dead, and dying, and if there was not active management involved to change the character of the forest health, that within a decade or so these forests could be swept by devastating wildfires.

Those scientists were not prophets. They didn't have a crystal ball. They simply looked at the facts that were available in the early 1980s and made a determination that, without active management, we could lose these forests in an unprecedented way.

During the decade of the 1980s that followed and the decade of the 1990s, we did just exactly the opposite of what those forest scientists proposed. We progressively became inactive on our forests, largely because many thought, and public policy allowed the argument, that no management and no activity would improve the environment. What we failed to recognize was that the environment had deteriorated so that simply could not be the case and that these kinds of fires would be stand altering, stand destructive, and destroying wildlife habitat and watersheds that we see in the West today.

The fire seasons in the West are not over. Today, literally thousands of acres are still burning. My guess is that before the fire season is over, we will see over 7 million acres of land burned.

Before we left for the August recess, a group of us gathered at a press conference to speak in a bipartisan way to this issue. At that time, we had not yet quite determined what we needed to do, but we believed the American public was becoming increasingly aware that something had to be done, that we needed to lean on this issue to save our forests, to save wildlife habitat, to have a watershed, and to protect homes in that urban wildland interface.

I said at that press conference—the last of July or early August, and at that time—that less than 4 million acres had burned. I said that probably by the time we returned over 67 million acres would have burned. I was no prophet. I simply had studied fires and the way they were burning in the West over the last several years to recognize that was probably a reality. And it became a reality practically enough. Today, 6.3 million acres have burned. Thousands of acres are currently burning, with fires in almost all of the Western States—at this moment actively burning and out of control.

We said at that press conference that when we returned, we would try to resolve a bipartisan approach we could bring to the floor so that we might offer it as an amendment to the Interior appropriations bill or some similar vehicle. We are in the final hours of trying to craft that kind of an amendment that would bring us together in a bipartisan way, and in a collaborative way, to solve this problem.

Earlier this year, the Western Governors Association, in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, met and produced a western fire policy that dealt with these fire-prone acres. They proposed a collaborative process that targeted those critical areas in all of the States involved and that would allow us to move forward in a relatively unrestricted but environmentally sound way to do so. There has been a lot of work going on to try to solve this problem.

Late this month, the President was out in Oregon, looked at those fire scenarios, and reported that he, too, agreed that active management was necessary, that our forests were at a critical state, that we were in a state of emergency, and that failure to respond was negligence on our part. The President also said we shouldn't block from the courthouse doors people who would want to appeal or object.

While I agree with you, Mr. President, and TOM DASCHLE, your colleague, chose a slightly different course that would have denied appeals and court actions under certain circumstances, we are working right now to try to see if we can craft that collaborative process that would limit but still allow some degree of protest and/or objection, or appeal based on law and based on the reality of the environment, and at the same time not allow those thousands who would choose to obstruct entirely—to simply use that as a tool to bring any action on our public land.

I hope by tomorrow we can bring to the floor that kind of an amendment which will have bipartisan support. We are going to try mightily to achieve that.

Let me close with this thought, because to me this is the most frightening of the thoughts about which I have talked.

Six point three million acres have burned to date, 2,500 homes have been wiped out, and 25 people have died trying to fight those fires. If this had been Hurricane Andrew, which devastated less, we, with the full force of the Government, would be out there today helping those people rebuild those homes and trying to solve the problem. But some have said: Oh, no, this is just Mother Nature, and this is natural. Well, hurricanes are Mother Nature, and they are very natural. But still we have reacted differently. A hurricane is going on in the forests of public lands—wiping out millions of acres of trees, 2,500 homes, killing 25 people to date, and it is clearly something we have to speak to, and speak loudly.

Even if we are able to gain public support to get optimum public activity on our public land, if we are able to thin and clean and fireproof tens of millions of acres a year—even if we do that—our scientists are telling us that the forested lands—the Great Basin West primarily, but all of the public forests of our country—today are in such unhealthy condition that over the next 15 years we could still average anywhere from 5 million to 8 million acres a year being wiped out by wildfire, depending on climate conditions—drought or lack of moisture.

Shame on us for having waited so long to attempt to do so little. But we must attempt now to do something. I hope we can bring all of the communities of interest together in a kind of collaborative process to look at these acres, to deal with what we call the class 3 sick, dead, and/or dying bug-infested acres, to look at our urban wildland interface, to talk about and help shape the environment that protects homes while at the same time protecting wildlife habitat and watershed and what can once again be the beautiful forests of this country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed as if in morning business for up to 12 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Thank you, Mr. President.

CONSERVATION FUNDING IN THE INTERIOR BILL

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, today the Senate begins consideration of the fiscal year 2003 Interior appropriations bill. Land conservation funding is the critical component of this legislation—funding for land conservation preserves, wetlands, open fields, barrens, and woodlands that are threatened by ever-increasing pressures from development.

I would like to highlight three land conservation projects funded in this bill that are of particular significance to the State of Maine.

First, let me congratulate the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, Senators BYRD and BURNS, for producing a bill that includes a generous amount for land conservation effort in the face of severe fiscal constraints.

The Forest Legacy Program, in particular, is funded at $80 million in this bill, which represents a nearly 25-percent increase from last year's level. This is a remarkable achievement considering that when I first joined the Senate in 1997, the Forest Legacy Program was funded at only $2 million.

I am a very strong supporter of the Forest Legacy Program because it recognizes that our forests are both the source of good jobs and of boundless recreational opportunities for our sportsmen, our hunters, our hikers, and everyone who enjoys the great outdoors.

I am very pleased, therefore, that the bill before us today includes $2.9 million in Forest Legacy funding for an important project in Maine. It is known as the West Branch Project. The funding that is in this legislation will help us complete this important land conservation effort. This historic project has been more than 3 years in the making, and it is a testament to what can be accomplished when the Federal Government teams up with private landowners, private nonprofit groups, and State and local governments to preserve special lands. I have worked hard with my senior colleague from Maine to help this project reach fruition.

This significant project will protect 330,000 acres of lakefront and forest lands in some of the most pristine areas of the State of Maine. Much of the West Branch lands make up the viewshed from Mt. Katahdin, Maine's largest peak and the northernmost point of the Appalachian Trail. Their protection through the Forest Legacy Program is critical for the well-being of Maine's recreational and natural resources. Moreover, protection of this land through the Forest Legacy Program will enable the landowners to continue to supply area mills and support the local economy while allowing the public continued access to the beautiful lakes, streams, and back country wildlands that are characteristic of this area.

That is why the Forest Legacy Program is such a good one. It recognizes that our forests have multiple purposes, that they can provide good jobs for those in the forest products industry as well as being a source of beautiful recreational opportunities for all of us who enjoy walking through the woods or fishing or hunting or enjoying the lakes and streams that abound in those forests.

Regrettably, the House Interior appropriations bill does not contain any funding for completing the West Branch Project; therefore, I hope the Senate position will prevail in conference.

Another land conservation project that is important to my State is the protection of the 8,600-acre Leavitt Plantation Forest. I, again, thank the managers of this bill for including $600,000 for this project in their legislation.

Leavitt is the largest contiguous forest in southern Maine. The forest was targeted for development 2 years ago, when it was scheduled for auction in as many as 13 separate parcels.

Fortunately, Renewable Resources, a timber management company, approached the Maine Department of Conservation and the Nature Conservancy with a plan to protect Leavitt Plantation. Working together with the owner of the property, the company agreed to purchase the tract up to the New Hampshire border and to sell a conservation easement that will protect wildlife habitat, while allowing the property to continue to be managed for forestry and recreation.

Finally, the bill includes $3 million to purchase critical shorebird nesting areas within the Rachel Carson National Wildlife Refuge. It is easy to see why so many are committed to protecting the Rachel Carson National Wildlife Refuge. The refuge's 5,000 acres are home to rich and diverse wildlife habitats, including coastal salt marshes, barrier beaches, forested wetlands, coastal meadows, and upland forests.

During the course of the year, more than 250 species of birds, 47 species of mammals, and 35 species of reptiles and amphibians can be found at the refuge. What is most remarkable about the refuge is that all of this wildlife and habitat diversity is located in Maine's most populated region. So this makes this wildlife refuge a particularly special place to the people of southern Maine.

The funding in this bill for Rachel Carson will help protect the habitat found on these lands. In addition, it will preserve open space in a region of Maine that faces tremendous development pressure. This project serves as yet another example of how nonprofit and community organizations can work together with the Federal Government to identify and acquire critical lands from willing private sellers that otherwise might be lost forever to sprawl and other development.

It takes considerable resources for the Federal Government to be an effective partner in the effort to protect habitat and preserve open space, particularly in high-growth areas such as southern Maine where the cost of land is increasingly high. That is why I have worked so hard in Washington to secure the resources needed to support these community-based conservation efforts in my home State.

Rachel Carson, the patron of the Wildlife Refuge, once said of her substantial accomplishments:

The beauty of the living world I was trying to save has always been uppermost in my mind. . . . Now I can believe I have at least helped a little.

I think Rachel Carson would agree that the land conservation funding in the Interior bill we are considering today is helping, piece by piece, to preserve "the beauty of the living world" and to "help a little." I am very pleased to support the land conservation efforts in the bill. Again, I thank the managers for their leadership in this area.

Madam President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATE FAIR FOCUS GROUP

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I say to my colleagues, Senators LIEBERMAN and THOMPSON and others who will be here, I have been known to speak for several hours, but I will not. I will just take a few minutes. When Members come to the floor to start debate of the homeland defense bill, I will be pleased to finish.

As a matter of fact, I will have an amendment, which will be the "no Federal contracts for expatriates" amendment, which is very similar to what I did on the Department of Defense bill. The House of Representatives actually took action on this with a pretty strong vote. What this says is, if you have companies that have moved to Bermuda and renounced their citizenship, they will not be getting any Federal contracts. It is a pretty simple proposition. I look forward to introducing the amendment and hope to do it shortly, this afternoon. I am ready to get going.

We have so much to do in such a short period of time that I hope Senators will come to the floor with amendments on both sides. I will be ready to do so.

As long as I am on the topic, I wanted to talk about my experience back home. I don't know about you, but we all have our own focus groups. The greatest focus group in Minnesota is the State fair. It is really quite a happening. In about 12 days, almost half the State's population comes to the State fair—2.5 million. That might be a slight exaggeration but not by much.

There are a couple of things I really like about the fair. One is, it is sort of the essence of political equality. Nobody has a lobbyist. Everybody counts as one and no more than one. Everybody comes up and talks with you.

I also like what we call the greater Minnesota focus. We have a very thriving metropolitan community, but we are also an agricultural State. It is great to see the very strong emphasis on agriculture at the fair.

It is a focus group because you can be at your own booth, and lots of people come up, and I guess that is self-selection, where maybe it is a lot of supporters and whatnot. But even there, certainly walking around, you will run into everybody and anybody, and people are going to tell you what is on their mind.

I heard a lot—a lot, a lot—about corporate responsibility. I don't know if people used those words, but there is really a lot of concern about this flat economy. And look at the news yesterday and today. That is what we have. People really are worried that they will not have any pension, and they are worried they might not have a job. In Minnesota, Mr. Joseph Nacchio, CEO of QWEST, Minnesotans, starting with the QWEST employees who worked so hard to build that company, they are not one bit pleased that while Mr. Nacchio was cheerleading them to invest a big part of their 401(k) in QWEST stock, he was dumping his own and walked away with around $230 million. There is a lot of that.

People are looking for those of us here to be watchdogs for them. They are looking for us to not be too influenced by all the big economic interests with all their money and lobbyists and their connections and clout. People are saying to all of us, we want you to be for us. I guess sometimes they are not so sure the Senate always is for them. In that respect, the Sarbanes bill was a very positive step forward.

We had a stalemate here in 1994 on health care when we were talking about universal health care coverage. Really between 1994 and now, it is as if this never was an issue. But the issue of health security, of affordable health care coverage for people, for their loved ones and families, has walked into people's living rooms. I heard more discussion of the cost of it—the premiums, the copays, the deductibles, the inadequate coverage—just unbelievable—and, of course, prescription drug coverage by the elderly and also by others. Health care has emerged. I don't have my own poll on all these issues, but I think it is a top issue for families.

In Minnesota, children have just started school, as in other States, and education is right up there. I am not without my bias. Two of our children are teachers. I will just tell you that Minnesota and a lot of States around the country are still counting on us to provide the resources that we committed to providing to them for education. There is a lot of discussion about education.

There were questions about Iraq, what is going to happen, concern. I don't think people feel they have much information. They want more information. They want to know about the different options and consequences of those different options.

Over and over again, if you want to say politics is very concrete and doesn't have much to do with labels, whether it was suburbs, inner city or greater Minnesota small towns, so much of the discussion was about the economy, so much of the discussion was: Senator, what is going to happen to our schools? We had to cut all these teachers. We don't have enough resources. Senator, my wife or my husband has $800 a month or $500 for prescription drugs. Senator, why do the pharmaceutical companies have so much power? Senator, what is going to happen to my pension? Senator, how did those big companies get away with what they have done to us?

That is really what I heard about again and again: I have no coverage; I don't have enough insurance.

I could go into a whole separate discussion. I see my colleague, Senator LIEBERMAN. I said when he came to the floor I would finish. I will.

I could have a separate discussion about agricultural policy and about small business and about veterans who are coming up, facing long waiting lines for health care in Minnesota. I just want to remind everybody: We have a lot of work to do in a short period of time. We ought to have amendments out here on the floor. We better make sure that we do not lose sight of these basic bread-and-butter economic issues so important to families and so important to people's lives.

We have a lot of work to do. I hope we will do it.

I say to my colleague from Connecticut, the reason I came over is that I am ready to offer an amendment. I think we need to do the work. I want to wait to see what my colleague has to say. I congratulate him on his superb work.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I thank my friend and colleague from Minnesota. In a moment, I will call up an amendment, which is the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee substitute amendment on homeland security, the substitute for the House bill that was sent over here. I will speak on the substitute amendment.

It had been my thought that, in the normal course, Senator THOMPSON, as ranking member on the committee, would introduce the first amendment. I have some reason to believe he may not be prepared to do that right away. But we are prepared to go forward.

I want to indicate—and perhaps my friend from Minnesota will want to talk to the leader about this—that I understand that Senator DASCHLE and Senator LOTT are prepared to move to table any amendments that they consider to be non-relevant to homeland security. Although, as the Senator from Minnesota knows, I share his anger about tax traders—if I may use that term—or tax evaders and support what he wants to do.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say to my colleague, in the strict text, I have drafted it as a relevant amendment.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I look forward to reasoning with the Senator and the leadership on that very question.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Madam President, is the bill going to be reported now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. REID. I thank the Chair.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 5005, which the clerk will state.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5005) to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Connecticut is recognized to call up amendment No. 4471.

Mr. REID. Madam President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to let me say a word or two?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I will.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I have been a part of some conversations. I think the two leaders are going to have Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator THOMPSON, the managers, determine what is relevant. I don't think they are going to do that. They will follow your lead on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4471

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I call up amendment No. 4471 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 4471.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in the RECORD of Tuesday, September 3, 2002, under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, this legislation is a result of the bipartisan work of the committee, and the occupant of the chair, the Senator from Missouri, has been a contributing member of it. It was endorsed by our committee on July 25 by a 12-to-5 vote. I believe very strongly that this deserves passage by the full Senate.

The substitute I am offering was modified in two respects after the committee held its business meetings in July. First, we added an offset to certain direct spending in the bill related, in fact, to civil service reform. Second, we have clarified earlier language about the conduct of risk and threat assessment by the new Department. Both changes were made after canvassing members of our committee and with the approval of the majority of the committee. I will describe them in more detail in a few moments.

This amendment, almost a year in the making, would create a focused and accountable Department of Homeland Security to enable our domestic defenses to rise to the unprecedented challenge of defeating terrorism on our home soil. Our defenses are either disorganized or organized for another day that is past.

This bill aims to reorganize our homeland defenses to meet the unprecedented threats from terrorism that are sadly part of the 21st century. This amendment would also create a White House office to ensure coordination across the many offices involved in the fight against terrorism, including intelligence, diplomatic and law enforcement agencies, foreign policy agencies, and economic assistance agencies that will remain outside the Department.

We recognize that the threat of terrorism on American soil will painfully be with us for some time. Therefore, the American people deserve and demand a Government equipped to meet and beat that threat. This committee-endorsed bill is presented in three divisions. Division A establishes a Department of Homeland Security, a White House office, and a national strategy for combating terrorism. Division B incorporates the provisions of the bipartisan Kennedy-Brownback reform of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

We are going to hear a lot during the debate, I am confident, about the need for further reorganization of the constituent agencies we have brought together in this bill. But the committee-endorsed bill actually does undertake a massive reorganization of the one agency that just about everyone agrees is in desperate need of reform, and that is the INS. Division C incorporates consensus civil service reforms, themselves the product of intensive collaboration and discussion over a period of time—months and perhaps years—that were added as an amendment by the bipartisan team of Senators VOINOVICH and AKAKA.

I expect we will hear people saying that our legislation hasn't given the President all the management flexibility he has asked for. Of course, that is literally true because we believe the administration's request simply went too far, usurping not only the fundamental responsibility of Congress to adopt civil service laws, but to undermine important protections that guard the workplace and Federal workers against favoritism and also that create some limits on the executive, some sense of accountability that is placed on those who have sway over those who have chosen to serve the public as Federal employees.

I urge my fellow Senators on both sides of the aisle to look carefully at the reforms we have incorporated and the new flexibilities that we do provide, which are sensible and significant indeed and, I believe, if passed, would give the Secretary of Homeland Security more management flexibility than any Secretary operating under current law has ever had.

I know this promises to be a controversial discussion, a serious discussion, and sometimes a passionate discussion. I look forward to airing our differences, resolving them, and getting a good bill to conference and then to the President's desk, certainly by the end of this session.

We in the Congress have accomplished great and seemingly daunting tasks in the past; but, honestly, I can think of few in my time in the Senate, which is now 14 years, that have been more critical to our common future and cry out to us to work across party lines, to raise America's guard against the savage, inhumane, cunning threat of international terrorism. In fact, that is what happened on our committee.

The legislation I offer today was, as I have said, endorsed in July. It was endorsed in a bipartisan vote of the Governmental Affairs Committee. That marked the end of one of many stages in the bill's development in our committee. All told, we have been at this for almost a year now—more than 11 months. We have worked with colleagues on both sides of the aisle. We have worked with experts in the field in various aspects of counterterrorism and homeland security. We have worked very closely since June 6—when President Bush endorsed the idea of a Department of Homeland Security—with the President and his staff at the White House.

We gleaned insight and learned a lot from 18 hearings of the Governmental Affairs Committee that were held after September 11 on this subject and dozens of hearings held by other committees of the Congress.

I must say that I am proud for our committee of the product of these labors. This legislation puts forth a creative, constructive, and comprehensive solution to the core homeland security challenges we now face.

Our legislation differs in some respects, including some important ones from the House-passed bill and also from the President's proposal. We are going to hear people dwell on those differences for much of the debate. That is understandable. In some ways, it would be surprising if legislation as significant and this large were passed without dissent. In some ways, it would be not only surprising but unhealthy. The spirit of debate and controversy is here, and I hope out of it we will emerge with a very strong bill. In the case of each significant difference, I believe in the path we have taken, and I look forward to explaining why.

Let me say again we cannot allow the differences to overshadow the vast common ground on which we stand. Mahatma Gandhi said: "Honest disagreement is often a good sign of progress." He had a point. With a bill this big, as I said, I would be uneasy if the Senate began the process in total unison.

Let's realize the underlying reality and not lose sight of it. Just about everyone in this Chamber, on both sides of the aisle, understands the urgent necessity of reordering and reorganizing our capabilities to detect danger, protect Americans from attack, and respond in the event of an incident. That consensus should guide us and should ultimately dominate here. In fact, it is hard to find a Member of the Senate or the other body who will say they are against the creation of a Department of Homeland Security. People have different ideas about how one or another piece of it might look, but there is no one I have heard who is really against the creation of this Department.

In the end, that is because I think people understand that the current state of disorganization in the Federal Government's apparatus for responding to homeland security threats is dangerous. The consensus, therefore, for responding to that disorganization is by organizing the Federal Government better to meet those threats, to protect our people, to protect our infrastructure, to see the threats before they emerge through good intelligence and law enforcement, to invest in science and technology, to make protection of the American people at home easier and more effective. In the end, I am confident that we will pass a bill creating a Department of Homeland Security, and the sooner the better.

The American people understand why the creation of a strong accountable Homeland Security Department is the best way forward. They know that the formation of such a Department will not of itself win our war against terrorism. Obviously, we need to continue to encourage and support our military that is on the front lines of offense against the al-Qaida forces that struck us on September 11 and clearly remain out there in the shadows scheming, arming, readying themselves to strike us again.

The disadvantage we now have in defending ourselves because of our disorganization can no longer be afforded. Today, as former Assistant Secretary of Defense Ashton Carter told our committee on June 26:

"Homeland security remains institutionally homeless."

It is well stated, "Homeland security remains institutionally homeless." Everyone is in charge, therefore, no one is in charge. Our legislation would give this vital mission a home under a single roof and a firm foundation with someone, the Secretary, clearly in charge with the responsible authority and accountability and hopefully the resources to get results.

For the first time, we would require in statute close and ongoing White House coordination of the many other pieces of the fight against this 21st century threat—terrorism—and those pieces could not be included in the Homeland Security Department. They include defense, diplomacy, finance, law enforcement, and others.

For the first time, we, through this legislation, would require a comprehensive assessment of threats and vulnerability so that we understand the worst threats and the best ways to respond. We need a blueprint today. We do not have it. For the first time, we would create a new intelligence division focused on the threats to our homeland, equipped to truly connect the intelligence and law enforcement dots from Federal, State, and local agencies, from human and signal intelligence, from closed and open sources, from law enforcement and foreign sources, including particularly the Counterterrorism Center at the CIA.

These dots were not connected before September 11. We lived to experience the disastrous consequences of that failure.

For the first time, we would bolster emergency preparedness and response efforts to ensure that all layers and levels of Government are working together to anticipate and prepare for the worst. Today, coordination is the exception, not the rule, and that is no longer acceptable.

For the first time, we would build strong bonds between Federal, State, and local governments to target terrorism. State and local officials are clearly on the front lines as first responders and, as I like to say, first preventers in the fight against terrorism.

Today, local communities are already expending funds to better protect their people and their assets post-September 11. They are waiting for help. They need better training, new tools, and a coordinated prevention and protection strategy. That absence of coordination and failure of adequate support for State and local first responders and first preventers is no longer justifiable.

For the first time, we would bring key border and national entry agencies together to ensure that dangerous people and goods and containers are kept out of our country without restricting the flow of legal immigration and commerce that nourishes the Nation.

Today, threats to America may be slipping through the cracks because of our disorganization, and that is indefensible. For the first time, we would promote dramatic new research and technology development opportunities in homeland defense. This war has no traditional battlefield, as I have said. One of the nontraditional battlefields where we must emerge is the laboratory with science and technology. This bill would leverage Government and academic research capabilities and focus private sector innovation on the challenge. Today these efforts are blurred and dispersed, and that is unwise.

For the first time under this proposal, we would facilitate close and comprehensive coordination between the public and private sectors to protect critical infrastructure. Fully 85 percent of our critical infrastructure is owned and operated by the private sector, but our Government is not now working systematically with those companies to identify and close vulnerabilities in, for example, communications networks, electric grids or food distribution systems. That is unbearable.

Finally, our legislation would adopt consensus civil service reforms to give Government new tools to manage it. These bipartisan reforms, introduced by Senators VOINOVICH and AKAKA, would provide significant new management flexibility in hiring employees and shaping the workforce, while assuring that the basic public accountability of the civil service system is not summarily dissolved.

Under our bill, new flexibilities will increase accountability, strengthen the chain of command, and give the Secretary and agencies throughout our Government the ability to put the right people in the right place at the right time to defend the security of the American people.

As the writer H.G. Wells once said, "Adapt or perish—now as ever—is nature's inexorable imperative."

That is our choice today. Adapt and get stronger, or grow weaker; adapt, or give the American people reason to live in fear; adapt, or live at the mercy of our cruel and cunning terrorist enemies rather than being in control of our own destiny, as a great people should be.

So that we have an understanding of why this legislation takes the form it does, let me tell you briefly how it has evolved. It has been a very careful and collaborative process, nearly a year in the making. Last October, Senator SPECTER and I introduced legislation to create a Department of Homeland Security. That was S. 1534. That legislation drew heavily on the recommendation of the Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security in the 21st Century, which was chartered by the Secretary of Defense and supported by both the President and Congress, with the mission of providing the most comprehensive Government-sponsored review of our national security in more than 50 years.

The Commission released three reports in 1999, 2000, 2001, respectively. Its third report, phase 3, entitled "Roadmap for National Security: Imperative for Change," warned that we would soon face asymmetrical and terrorist threats and would need a focused Cabinet-level homeland security agency with adequate budget authority and direct accountability to the President to detect and counter those threats.

The Commission's conclusion, headed by our former colleagues Gary Hart and Warren Rudman, was issued on January 31, 2001, more than a half year before the day of darkness, September 11, 2001. Their conclusion included this statement: "The United States is today very poorly organized to design and implement any comprehensive strategy to protect the homeland."

Senators Hart and Rudman, and the other distinguished members of the Commission, made their case effectively and, I might say, eloquently. But the attacks of September 11 tragically drove the message home as no words could or, unfortunately, did. We were suddenly and clearly aware that we were more susceptible than we ever expected to the brutality of terrorism directed against innocent Americans for one reason only: Because they were Americans.

No matter their origin, in terms of ethnicity, religion, race, gender, age, place in life, new American or born American, but just because they were Americans in America, they were targets. We realized we were susceptible to that kind of violent extremism and we did not have the organizational capabilities to leverage our strengths and protect ourselves to the best of our ability.

So the bill I was privileged to introduce with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator ARLEN SPECTER, making it obviously bipartisan, last October, hewed closely to the model proposed by the Hart-Rudman Commission and also drew on recommendations made by the Gilmore Commission and others. We called for a new Department made up of the Coast Guard, Customs, Border Patrol, and FEMA, as well as some smaller offices on critical infrastructure protection and emergency preparedness.

The compelling need for such a Department was reinforced in those 18 hearings before the Governmental Affairs Committee during which 85 different witnesses testified on various aspects of homeland security. We learned a great deal also from dozens of other hearings by other committees on both sides of the Hill. So for those who may worry or suggest that we are moving more rapidly than we should, this is the record: Painstaking, deliberative, extensive consultation, investigation, education by experts, and an openness to ideas wherever they came from because of the critical necessity to do something to protect our security.

As chairman of the committee, I have been guided by a maxim that was used about foreign and defense policy, which is that partisanship stops at our Nation's coasts. In the same way, since this new enemy, the terrorists, has brought warfare within the United States of America, I say when we are discussing matters of homeland security, partisanship also must stop. That is the spirit in which our committee has gone forward.

We discovered, whether the subject was anthrax in the mail or port security or critical infrastructure protection, that the Federal Government is now lacking an approach to our problems that is either strong enough or coordinated enough to meet what we now know, post-September 11, is the reality of the challenge to us. In other words, we are dividing our strengths at a time when we should be multiplying them.

Again and again, the same message emerged from the witnesses who came before us, in big bold letters one might say: We still are not adequately prepared for terrorism at home, and a strong Cabinet-level Department, encompassing the key programs related to homeland security, is the necessary first step to addressing those deficiencies and closing those vulnerabilities.

The need for such a Department was further underscored by our experience with the Office of Homeland Security that was established last October by Executive Order of the President. The President appointed Gov. Tom Ridge to fill that position. Governor Ridge is an able, hard-working public servant. He has had the President's confidence and his ear from the very start. But we saw then, and the President would later acknowledge, that the office simply lacked the budgetary and organizational authority to reshape the Federal bureaucracy to define priorities and to get results. Only a Cabinet-level Secretary in charge of the Cabinet-level Department could accomplish that task.

In the debate that has already begun and clearly will go on in consideration of this bill, the President and the administration and their allies in this Chamber are saying we have not given the Executive enough management flexibility. The fact is that flexibility must come with power. It was our bill almost a year ago, in contrast to the President's position, that wanted to give the Executive the authority to be able to carry out the necessary changes in the Federal bureaucracy.

So to portray somehow that this bill is protective of the Federal bureaucracy is not right. In fact, the President's original position that this task could be carried out by an Office of Homeland Security did not give that office the power. It had no management flexibility because the constituent agencies exercised the authority they had under law which was superior to the director of the office. Therefore, in that sense, as well as all the specific senses in which we give management flexibility to the Executive, we are proposing a Department with a strong Secretary. That is the way to get the job done: blend the employees together, encourage them to work together, and set standards for them achieving homeland security. That can only be done by a strong Secretary.

At the same time, however, it became apparent that no single Department could address all of the Federal programs or coordinate all the programs of all the Federal agencies engaged in homeland security or in the war on terrorism. Therefore, last May, Senator SPECTER and I combined our proposal with legislation introduced by our colleague from Florida, Senator BOB GRAHAM, chairman of the Intelligence Committee, calling for the creation of a National Office for Combating Terrorism within the White House to coordinate Federal antiterrorism efforts government-wide.

In contrast to the position created for Governor Ridge by Executive Order, this office would be a Senate confirmed-position, with full accountability and authority as well as statutory power to review Federal budgets related to terrorism.

The combined legislation that we have before the Senate in the form of this substitute amendment which I have introduced this afternoon, resulted from, as I said, Senator SPECTER and I joining with Senator GRAHAM. Obviously, there is more added by the committee. That legislation originally was introduced on May 2, and considered by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on May 22 of this year, and reported out on a 9-to-7 vote—a vote exactly split along party lines.

On June 6, we got a surprise, a welcome surprise. We gained another supporter, a most important supporter. That was, of course, President George Bush. This, I believe, was a recognition by the President—he said so in his own words—that the Office of Homeland Security, as it was created by Executive Order, was just too weak to get the job done. That is what we had been arguing for months. That announcement was followed by a legislative proposal from the administration. We were pleased to see the administration's bill encompass almost all the S. 2452 provisions regarding a Department of Homeland Security.

It went further, however, and also proposed that additional programs and agencies be transferred to the new Department—and there were some good ideas there—to ensure the new administration proposals were properly considered and necessary adjustments made to our legislation.

As chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, I held four additional hearings on aspects of the President's proposal. Incorporating the insight from those hearings, as well as input from extensive discussion with colleagues, including committee chairmen and ranking members, we prepared an expanded version of S. 2452. The expanded version went a considerable way toward incorporating the proposals the President and the administration made that had not been made part of our original bill. It was further amended during two very thoughtful, constructive days of committee deliberation and was ultimately endorsed by our Senate Governmental Affairs Committee by a bipartisan vote of 12 to 5. That is what I offered as a substitute amendment to H.R. 5005. The amendment I now offer is the product of this lengthy and healthy process of consultation and deliberation. I thank my colleagues in the Senate for indulging me in this brief history expedition, and I want to say why I take the time to discuss the time it took; and that is to demonstrate that we have gone a great distance to hone this bill, to be open to input from anyone, to reach consensus, to modify, and amplify different sections.

The Department we have designed would for the first time combine, under a single chain of command and under the leadership of a single Secretary who is accountable to the President and the people, dozens of agencies and offices responsible for homeland security.

The Department's overarching mission, as stated in Section 101 of this amendment, is twofold: To promote homeland security, particularly with regard to terrorism; and to carry out the other functions and promote the other missions of entities transferred to the Department as provided by law. That is a very important statement.

As much attention as the first part of the mission, homeland security, will get in this debate, the second half cannot be forgotten because even though this Department's very reason for being created is to intelligently organize our Government's homeland security efforts, many of its constituent agencies perform vital, non-homeland security duties, as well. They cannot and will not stop doing that work.

Our bill, in clear and unequivocal language, requires the Department to uphold these other missions and functions.

The extent to which the constituent agencies and programs that are brought into this Department can both protect homeland security and continue to carry out the other responsibilities will depend on the extent to which we in Congress, through the appropriations process, are prepared to support this new Department.

The Secretary will be responsible for running the Department and for developing policies and plans for the promotion of homeland security. The legislation also charges the Secretary with including State and local governments, tribes, and other entities who, again, are first responders and first preventers of the fight against terrorism in every State and city and county and town in our country. The Secretary must consult them, with the Secretary of Defense and also State officers, regarding possible integration of the U.S. military, including the National Guard, into all aspects of the homeland security strategy and its implementation. The Guard is a mighty force, with an historic mission which was originally, of course, to protect homeland security. It has tremendous potential in this new 21st century, in responding to this 21st century threat to our security without making it by any stretch, kind of a Federal constabulary. But the Guard has extraordinary skill and equipment sophistication and can play a very constructive role here.

We also have charged the Secretary with the responsibility of developing a comprehensive information technology blueprint for the Department. The Senator from Illinois, Mr. DURBIN, talked quite eloquently and effectively about one aspect of that yesterday. In addition, the Secretary is responsible for administering the homeland security advisory system, and for annually reviewing and updating the Federal Response Plan for homeland security and emergency preparedness.

This is a big job. The size should make it clear how much we need the new Department. No one in Government is performing these duties adequately today. If they are doing the duties, they are not doing them systematically, certainly not synergistically. There are a lot of gears turning. Some are touching each other, some are not. Some are spinning in isolation. We want the gears to turn together, generating torque, producing energy, and getting results. That means more security for the American people at home.

No one can claim that the creation of a new Department is a guarantee or panacea for all our problems. I agree with Charles Boyd, distinguished American, great public servant and Executive Director of the Hart-Rudman Commission:

"There is no perfect organizational design, no flawless managerial mix. The reason is that organizations are made up of people, and people invariably devise informal means of dealing with one another in accord with the accidents of personality and temperament." Even excellent organizational structure cannot make impetuous or mistaken leaders patient or wise, but poor organizational design can make good leaders less effective.

That, in one sense, is what this is all about. Poor organizational design makes good leaders less effective with unnecessary gaps, overlaps, and bureaucratic barriers—by spreading authority and resources too thin, by diminishing accountability, by tolerating overlap and inefficiency—while good organizational design will empower good leaders, hold people accountable, and enable their talent and hard work to make a difference.

In other words, 10 gallons of gas poured into a well-designed, efficient engine can get you long distances at high speeds, but 10 gallons poured into an old, less efficient engine won't get you very far in a very efficient way.

That leads me to a second caution about the legislation, which is the blueprint that we need to build a Homeland Security Department that America needs. In a number of areas likely to be the most controversial, I strongly believe we have chosen the right path. But it would be arrogant of me or anyone to suggest that this legislation is perfect. It is not. That is why we have specifically built into it room for adjustment and refinement as the administration actually begins moving the pieces together. And we have given them a year from the effective date to, in fact, do that.

We require the administration to report back to Congress 6 months after the effective date or earlier during the reorganization process, and every 6 months thereafter, and require recommendations for changes to law at these junctures and throughout the process.

So even the passage of this bill will be not the end of the process, but its start; as Churchill once said in a very different context, "not the beginning of the end, but the end of the beginning."

But the fact that we cannot guarantee perfection is no argument against this legislation. Obviously, even our country's Constitution, which Senator BYRD and Senator THOMPSON and others quite eloquently and correctly honored and celebrated in yesterday's debate, the very foundation of our democracy, a democracy created with as much foresight and wisdom as any other in the history of government, was not perfect. It has been amended 27 times. At the time, the Founders understood it had to be built to change over time. Indeed, during the ratification debate, Alexander Hamilton urged those who criticized the Constitution not to fail to approve it in what he called "the chimerical pursuit of a perfect plan." In a more homely translation that we constantly—at least regularly—use here: Don't let the perfect be the enemy of the good.

Similarly, we must not fail to create this Department in pursuit of a perfect Department. History has dropped at our feet an urgent and necessary challenge, to reshape our Government, to protect the lives and affirm the values of our people, for surely our terrorist enemies are as intent on striking and destroying our humanistic, tolerant, inclusive, free values as they are of destroying our people. We can either meet the moment by staying focused on that goal or we can let it pass by bickering over petty and sometimes partisan or ideological particulars.

Let the debate go forward, but let us, as we go forward in debating and amending this substitute amendment that I have laid down, remember the urgent challenge the terrorists have given us and the broad ground we all seem to occupy about most of how we should respond to that challenge, by creating this Department.

Let's have some debates and disagreements. But when it is all over, let's remember, not only in this bill but more generally in our values, there is so much more that unites us, and that ultimately is our greatest strength against our enemies, past, present, and future. We must be certain to preserve that when this debate is done and a new Department of Homeland Security is created.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an addendum statement, a section-by-section analysis, and a letter dated August 28, 2002.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I want to share with the Senate my views on the meaning and intent of the provisions we added to this legislation since the Governmental Affairs Committee first considered the bill in May and filed the accompanying report to S. 2452. This legislation has been almost a year in the making, and reflects the thoughtful contributions of an array of distinguished legislators and policy experts.

Last October, I introduced legislation with Senator Specter to create a Department of Homeland Security (S. 1534). That legislation drew heavily on the recommendations of the United States Commission on National Security/21st Century, also known as the Hart-Rudman Commission. It called for a new department made up of the Coast Guard, Customs, Border Patrol, and FEMA, as well as some smaller offices that specialize in critical infrastructure protection and emergency preparedness. The compelling need for such a department was quickly underscored in a series of hearings before the Governmental Affairs Committee examining aspects of homeland security. Whether the subject was anthrax in the mail, port security, or critical infrastructure protection, the Federal government generally did not have a strong, coordinated approach to address the range of threats. A strong, Cabinet-level department encompassing key programs related to homeland security would be a vital first step to addressing this deficiency. At the same time, however, it became apparent that no single department could address all of the Federal programs engaged in the war on terrorism. Therefore, I combined forces with Sen. Graham, who had proposed legislation to create a White House terrorism office to coordinate federal efforts to combat terrorism government-wide. In contrast to the position created by executive order for Gov. Ridge, this office would be a Senate-confirmed position with full accountability and authority, as well as statutory power to review federal budgets relating to terrorism. The combined legislation, the "National Homeland Security and Combating Terrorism Act of 2002," was introduced on May 2, 2002. It was considered by the Governmental Affairs Committee on May 22, 2002 and reported out on a 7-3 vote. A full account of the background and history of that legislation is included in its accompanying report, No. 107-175.

Before the full Senate had a chance to consider that bill, however, the President announced his support for a Department of Homeland Security. That announcement was followed, on June 18, with a legislative proposal from the administration. The administration's bill encompassed almost all of S. 2452's organizational elements regarding a Department of Homeland Security. It went further, however, and proposed that additional programs and agencies be transferred to the new department. To ensure that these new administration proposals were properly considered, the Governmental Affairs Committee held four additional hearings. Then, working with other committee chairmen and ranking members, I prepared an amendment to S. 2452 that was considered at a July 24-25 business meeting of the Governmental Affairs Committee. That expanded version of S. 2452 went a considerable way to incorporate Administration proposals that had not been part of the original bill. It was further amended during two days of Committee deliberation, and ultimately endorsed by a bipartisan Committee vote of 12 to 5.

What follows is a description of some of the key changes to the legislation since the May 22, 2002 markup of S. 2452. It should be considered in concert with Report 107-175, which describes the core of the legislation—most of which is unchanged. A complete section-by-section analysis is also included.

As reported out of the Governmental Affairs Committee (GAC) on May 22nd, S. 2452 created a Department of Homeland Security with three directorates: Border and Transportation Protection, Critical Infrastructure Protection, and Emergency Preparedness and Response. The GAC-endorsed legislation now includes additional programs and agencies that will be organized into six directorates: the original three, plus directorates for Intelligence, Immigration and Science and Technology, an expanded version of a Science and Technology Office in the original bill. The key changes are summarized below:

The GAC-endorsed legislation adds the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to the agencies incorporated into the Directorate for Border and Transportation Protection. TSA was created through the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, Pub. L. 107-71, which was signed into law on November 19, 2001. The agency's mission is to protect the country's transportation systems, including rail, highways, and maritime, although currently its main focus is to improve aviation safety. TSA's responsibilities include meeting a series of deadlines to upgrade aviation security, including the hiring of more than 30,000 airport security personnel, deploying explosive detection systems and other security equipment, facilitating airport passenger and baggage inspection, and implementing other measures to heighten the safety of air travel.

The inclusion of TSA in the Department will permit better coordination of transportation security operations with other agencies that are responsible for security at the borders. These agencies, which include the Customs Service, Coast Guard, Border Patrol, INS, and border inspection agents from the Animal Plant and Health Inspection Service, are responsible for conducting inspections of travelers and goods entering the United States and for securing the international boundaries the United States shares with Mexico and Canada. TSA's mission to secure our transportation infrastructure is closely tied to maintaining the security of the ports of entry where these border agencies are stationed. For example, cargo containers that pass through our ports are conveyed to other parts of the country through our transportation system, either on rail or the highways, and could cause significant harm and disruption to our transportation infrastructure if they contained explosives or were used in a terrorist attack. It is essential for these agencies to coordinate their efforts so that security measures are linked and more seamlessly implemented. This process will be easier with TSA and the key border agencies in the same chain of command.

Our transportation system must also be able to move people and goods quickly and efficiently from the borders throughout the country. To ensure the security of this system, TSA needs access to key information regarding vulnerabilities and threats. The Department's Directorate of Intelligence, which I will describe shortly, will have the intelligence architecture to help provide this critical information to TSA and other agencies within the Department. By being closely tied to that intelligence directorate, and to the other border agencies in the Department that will be collecting vital information, TSA will be in a better position to prevent future attacks using the transportation system.

Finally, as a new agency TSA may be able to take advantage of some economies of scale offered by the new Department. Specifically, it may not need to create certain capabilities—administrative or otherwise—that will already exist in other components of the Department.

In S. 2452, the Customs Service was transferred intact to the Department. This remains the case in the GAC-endorsed legislation, which also provides that Customs will be preserved as a distinct entity.

At the request of the Senate Finance Committee Chairman and Ranking Member, the legislation incorporates an amendment, adopted by the Committee and agreed to by both the White House and the Finance Committee Chairman and Ranking Member, which will preserve the ability of the Treasury Secretary—with the concurrence of the Secretary—to issue regulations on customs revenue functions that involve economic judgments within the expertise of the Treasury Department, and which can have a major impact on our economy and relationships with foreign countries. These customs revenue functions include: assessing, collecting, and refunding duties, taxes, and fees on imported goods; administering import quotas and labeling requirements; collecting import data needed to compile international trade statistics; and administering reciprocal trade agreements and trade preference legislation. The Customs Service, reporting to the Secretary, is responsible for administering and enforcing these laws, and indeed for all the Custom Service's traditional border and revenue operations; the Commissioner of Customs is also authorized to develop and support the issuance of regulations by the Treasury Secretary regarding customs revenue functions. After further review, Congress may consider legislation to determine the appropriate allocation of these regulatory authorities between the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Treasury Secretary.

The legislation transfers the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC) from the Department of the Treasury to the Directorate for Border and Transportation Protection. FLETC provides basic and advanced agency-specific training for law enforcement officers and analysts at over 70 Federal agencies. This training allows for greater standardization of law enforcement training that is also more cost-effective and is taught by professional instructors using modern facilities. Many of its key customer agencies are being transferred to the new Department, including the Secret Service, INS, Border Patrol, Customs Service, Coast Guard, and Federal Protective Service. Given these relationships, the Department will benefit from the inclusion of FLETC.

FLETC also provides training to State and local entities and to foreign law enforcement personnel, programs generally not otherwise available to these agencies. The programs also enhance networking and cooperation throughout the law enforcement community, domestically as well as world-wide. Therefore, these programs will support and complement the Department's efforts to work more closely with State and local agencies as well as foreign governments to detect and prevent acts of terrorism.

The legislation transfers the Coast Guard to the new Department, and specifies that it be maintained as a distinct entity. At the July 24-25 business meeting, the Committee adopted language intended to maintain the structural and operational integrity of the Coast Guard and the authority of the Commandant, ensure continuation of the non-homeland security missions of the Coast Guard and the Service's capabilities to carry out these missions as it is transferred to the new Department, and ensure that the Commandant reports to the Secretary.

The language, offered as an amendment by Senators Stevens and Collins, states that the Secretary may not make any significant change to any of the non-homeland security missions and capabilities of the Coast Guard without the prior approval of the Congress in a subsequent statute. The President may waive this restriction for no more than 90 days upon his declaration and certification to the Congress that a clear, compelling, and immediate state of national emergency exists that justifies such a waiver.

The language further directs that the Coast Guard's organizational structure, units, personnel, and non-homeland security missions shall be maintained intact and without reduction after the transfer unless Congress specifies otherwise in subsequent Acts. The language also states that Coast Guard personnel, ships, aircraft, helicopters, and vehicles may not be transferred to the operational control of, or diverted to the principal and continuing use of, any other organization, unit, or entity of the Department.

Upon the transfer of the Coast Guard to the Department, the Commandant shall report directly to the Secretary and not through any other official of the Department.

The Inspector General of the Department shall annually assess the Coast Guard's performance of all its missions with a particular emphasis on examining the non-homeland security missions.

None of the conditions in the approved language shall apply when the Coast Guard operates as a service in the Navy under section 3 of title 14, United States Code.

The legislation creates a separate directorate for intelligence (DI) to serve as a national level focal point for information available to the government relating to the plans, intentions, and capabilities of terrorists and terrorist organizations. To emphasize its importance to all aspects of Homeland Security, the DI is an independent directorate within the Department, and is headed by an Under Secretary who reports to the Secretary.

This directorate is a new addition to the legislation since the May 22 markup. It stems from the Administration's proposal to create an intelligence analysis unit within the Department. However, the President's concept has been altered and strengthened in response to testimony before the Committee and input from key senators. Specifically, this proposal reflects important input from Senators Levin and Akaka, both in negotiations and amendments offered at the business meeting. In addition, Intelligence Chairman Senator GRAHAM, Intelligence Vice Chairman Senator SHELBY, former Intelligence Chairman Senator SPECTER and Senator DURBIN contributed key ideas.

As an independent directorate—without the operational responsibilities of other directorates—the DI will focus on providing intelligence analysis to all of the other directorates in the Department, to State and local government, and to law enforcement, for the purpose of preventing terrorist attacks, enhancing border security, protecting critical infrastructure, enhancing emergency preparedness and response, and better informing our research and development activities.

It is important to note that the new Department, through its component organizations, will be one of the largest generators in the government of information relevant to terrorism. The data it obtains about persons and goods entering the country must be better organized and coordinated with threat data from other agencies if the new Department is going to be able to do its job. The DI, therefore, will be responsible for receiving and analyzing law enforcement information from agencies of the United States government, State and local government agencies (including law enforcement agencies), and the private sector, and fusing such information and analysis with analytical products, assessments, and warnings concerning foreign intelligence from the CIA's Counterterrorist Center in order to detect and identify threats of terrorism and other threats to homeland security. The Counterterrorist Center shall have primary responsibility for the analysis of foreign intelligence relating to international terrorism. However, the DI may also conduct its own supplemental analysis of foreign intelligence relating to threats of terrorism against the United States and other threats to homeland security.

The DI's mission is critical to all the Department's activities, as well as to the homeland security mission of the intelligence community, law enforcement community, and State and local governments. For this reason, unless the President directs otherwise, the Secretary is provided with broad, routine access to reports, assessments, analytical information, and other information—including unevaluated intelligence—from the intelligence community and other United States government agencies. The Secretary will also receive information from State and local government agencies, and the private sector. As the President may further provide, the Secretary is also authorized to request additional information—either information that an agency already has in its possession, or new information that could require further investigation. The Secretary will work with the Director of Central Intelligence and the Attorney General to ensure that all material received by the Department is protected against unauthorized disclosure and that sources and methods are protected.

The provision also reflects an amendment by Senator AKAKA that makes the Department a full participant in the process, managed by the Director of Central Intelligence, whereby the intelligence community establishes overall requirements and priorities for the collection of national intelligence. Similarly, the Akaka amendment also makes the Directorate responsible for consulting with the Attorney General and other officials to establish overall collection priorities and strategies for information, including law enforcement information, relating to domestic threats.

The intelligence proposal reflected in the GAC-endorsed legislation was developed after examining the Administration's proposal and hearing from expert witnesses on the critical need for a national level focal point for the analysis of all information available to the United States to combat terrorism. On June 26 and 27, the Committee held hearings on how to shape the intelligence functions of the proposed Department—to determine how, in light of the failure of our government to bring all of the information available to various agencies together prior to September 11 the government should receive information from the field, both foreign and domestic, and convert it, through analysis, into actionable information that better protects our security.

The Committee heard testimony from former directors of the Defense Intelligence Agency and National Security Agency, from FBI Director Mueller and Director of Central Intelligence Tenet, and from William Webster—who headed both the FBI and CIA. It also heard from the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senators Bob Graham and Richard Shelby, whose investigation into the failures of September 11 is expected to yield recommendations for broader reforms that address longstanding and systemic problems within the intelligence community.

Senator Graham's written testimony stated that the Intelligence Committee's hearings thus far have uncovered several factors that contributed to the failures of September 11—one of which is "the absence of a single set of eyes to analyze all the bits and pieces of relevant intelligence information, including open source material." Senator SHELBY's written testimony stated that "most Americans would probably be surprised to know that even nine months after the terrorist attacks, there is today no federal official, not a single one, to whom the President can turn to ask the simple question, what do we know about current terrorist threats against our homeland? No one person or entity has meaningful access to all such information the government possesses. No one really knows what we know, and no one is even in a position to go to find out." General Patrick Hughes, former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, echoed these points. His testimony stated that, "in our intelligence community, we currently have an inadequate capability to process, analyze, prepare in contextual and technical forms that make sense and deliver cogent intelligence to users as soon as possible so that the time dependent operational demands for intelligence are met."

The Administration's approach falls short of what we need. A key concern is the mission and position of the intelligence unit within the new Department. By making intelligence its own directorate, our legislation recognizes that the work it does will be instrumental to every other directorate in the organization and to state and local authorities—not just to federal infrastructure protection efforts. The Administration's proposal imbeds the intelligence division within a directorate responsible for critical infrastructure protection. The Administration's proposal is to create an "information analysis and critical infrastructure protection division"—whose most important role, as CIA Director Tenet testified before the Committee on June 27, would be "to translate assessments about evolving terrorist targeting strategies, training, and doctrine overseas into a system of protection for the infrastructure of the United States." But that is not enough. Intelligence will be crucial not only to infrastructure protection, but to everything this Department will do. It is not hard to imagine many threats to American lives that do not involve infrastructure at all: a plot to detonate a bomb in a shopping mall, for instance, or to unleash a biological agent on a city from above.

To be most effective, the entity responsible for producing all-sources intelligence analysis should not be charged with implementing operational responsibilities. The danger in the Administration's approach is that the intelligence analysis function will be consumed by the operational needs of critical infrastructure protection, and not focus enough on other aspects of the homeland security fight.

There is also a practical reason why these two functions should be under different Under Secretaries. Both are very complex functions that have never before been performed in our government. These are very demanding jobs and the GAC endorsed amendment places them under different Under Secretaries so that, like border and transportation security, science and technology, immigration, and emergency preparedness and response, they will receive the focused leadership and attention necessary to succeed. Just protecting our cyber assets—which is only one aspect of critical infrastructure—is a daunting challenge that grows more each year.

The Under Secretary for Intelligence, who will have to establish and operate a robust Directorate of Intelligence to systematically analyze the threats to our country will be fully consumed with that function. The Under Secretary for Critical Infrastructure Protection, whose role will be to map the threat information to the vulnerabilities in our critical infrastructure, and work closely with other agencies, and the private sector to ensure adequate protective measures are put in place, will also have a huge challenge. However, by making the same official responsible for establishing a robust intelligence division and protecting critical infrastructure, the Administration's proposal underestimates the challenges that we face in both areas.

Secondly, the President's proposal does not allow the DI sufficient, routine access to information produced by other parts of the Intelligence Community and other agencies. The GAC-endorsed legislation provides the Secretary with broad, routine access to reports, assessments, analytical information, and other information—including unevaluated intelligence—relating to the capabilities, intentions, and activities of terrorists and terrorist organizations, unless otherwise directed by the President. "Unevaluated intelligence" refers to the substance of intelligence reports, absent any information about sources and methods. We use this term based on the recommendation of the Chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee—precisely to make it clear that information about sources and methods, which is generally included in "raw intelligence", will be protected. In contrast, the Administration's proposal would curtail the Secretary's access to unanalyzed information. The Secretary would have routine access to reports, assessments, and analytical information. But, except for information concerning vulnerabilities to critical infrastructure, the Secretary would receive access to unanalyzed information only as the President may further provide.

At the Committee's hearing on June 27, Senator Shelby, the Vice Chairman of the Intelligence Committee, objected to the limitations on information access in the President's proposal. He stated that "unlike information relating to infrastructure or other vulnerabilities to terrorist attack—all of which the Secretary would be given access to 'whether or not such information has been analyzed'—information on terrorist threats analyzed'—information on terrorist threats themselves would be available to the Department only in the form of what is known as 'finished' intelligence." He testified that, under Sec. 203 of the President's proposal, the Secretary may obtain the underlying information only 'by request' or when the President specifically provides for its transmission to the new Department. Senator Shelby called these limitations in the President's bill "unacceptable". Clearly, the Administration's proposal would reinforce tendencies not to share information among agencies that have historically been reluctant to share. Our purpose is to remove obstacles to information sharing—obstacles that clearly contributed to the tragedy of September 11—not to reinforce them.

The GAC-endorsed amendment establishes a proactive DI. In addition to helping set intelligence priorities and receiving analysis from all other agencies in government, it would have routine access to the unevaluated intelligence, the information behind the reports that DHS will receive, unless the President directs otherwise. The Secretary will also be able to request and receive additional information (as the President further provides) that might require agencies to conduct separate investigations or redeploy resources. We anticipate that the cases would be rare where an agency is unwilling or unable to comply with the Secretary's request; however, the President will ultimately determine how conflicts, if any, will be resolved.

During the July 24-25 business meeting, Senator Thompson offered an amendment reflecting the President's approach on intelligence; however that amendment was defeated.

S. 2452 included a Directorate for Critical Infrastructure Protection (CIP). The GAC endorsed amendment continues to include that directorate, and expands it to incorporate significant additions as proposed by the President. The Directorate will be headed by an Under Secretary who is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The CIP will combine the key entities, currently scattered across the Federal government, that are charged with working with the private sector and other agencies to protect various sectors of our nation's critical infrastructure. The authorities, functions, personnel, and assets of several offices are transferred to the Department. These include the Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office of the Department of Commerce (established by Presidential Decision Directive 63 in 1998 to coordinate federal initiatives on critical infrastructure); and the National Infrastructure Protection Center of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than the Computer Investigations and Operations Section, which the Administration requested remain in the FBI to ensure that it continues to have a capability to pursue computer crimes). To these we have added several important entities from the President's proposal: (1) the National Communications System of the Department of Defense (established by Executive Order in 1984 to assist the President and others in: (a) the exercise of telecommunications functions and (b) coordinating the planning for and provision of national security and emergency preparedness communications); (2) the Computer Security Division of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) of the Department of Commerce (which is tasked with improving information systems security); (3) The National Infrastructure Simulation and Analysis Center of the Department of Energy (established to serve as a source of national competence to address critical infrastructure protection and continuity through support for activities related to counterterrorism, threat assessment, and risk mitigation); (4) The Federal Computer Incident Response Center of the General Service Administration (a partnership of computer incident response, security, and law enforcement personnel to share information and handle computer security incidents); and (5) The Energy Security and Assurance Program of the Department of Energy, a national security program to help reduce America's energy supply vulnerability from severe disruptions due to natural or malevolent causes.

Finally, the GAC endorsed legislation transfers the Federal Protective Service of the General Services Administration (GSA) to the CIP. The President proposed that FPS be transferred to the Border and Transportation Protection Directorate. The Federal Protective Service oversees security at Federal property managed by GSA. Its expertise and mission is to provide physical security for some of our nation's key resources, making it more appropriate that it be combined with the other entities responsible for physical security and cyber security in this Directorate.

The GAC endorsed legislation establishes specialized research and analysis units in the CIP to process intelligence and identify vulnerabilities in key areas, including: (a) Public health, (b) food and water storage, production, and distribution; (c) commerce systems, including banking and finance; (d) energy systems, including electric power and oil and gas production and storage; (e) transportation systems, including pipelines; (f) information and communication systems; (g) continuity of government services; and (h) other systems or facilities the destruction of which would cause substantial harm to health, safety, property, or the environment.

Among its other duties, the CIP shall be responsible for receiving relevant information from the Directorate of Intelligence, law enforcement, and other information to assess the vulnerabilities of the key resources and critical infrastructures; identifying priorities and supporting protective measures by the Department and other entities; developing a comprehensive national plan for securing key resources and critical infrastructure; enhancing and sharing of information regarding cyber-security and physical security; developing security standards, tracking vulnerabilities, proposing improved risk management policies; and delineating the roles of various governmental agencies in preventing, defending, and recovering from attacks.

The Directorate will also be responsible for establishing the necessary organizational structure to provide leadership and focus on both cyber-security and physical security, and ensuring the maintenance of a nucleus of cyber and physical security experts in the United States Government. Both cyber and physical security are critical to the adequate protection of those systems on which our nation's economy and culture depend. The CIP will be responsible for utilizing the best modeling, simulation, and analytic tools to prioritize the effort.

The creation of this Directorate indicates broad consensus on the need for a single entity to coordinate a national effort to secure America's critical infrastructure. This is a shared responsibility of Federal, State, and local governments along with a private sector which owns 85% of our nation's critical infrastructure. However, unlike the President's proposal, which combines information analysis and infrastructure protection under one Under Secretary, the GAC amendment places Critical Infrastructure Protection in its own directorate where it will work closely with the Intelligence Directorate. This was done both to elevate and stress the centrality of intelligence analysis to all of the Department's missions, but also because critical infrastructure protection is a sufficiently complex and daunting challenge that it will require the focused leadership and attention of an Under Secretary.

As reported out of the Committee in May, S. 2452 would have transferred the law enforcement programs of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to the new Department, while leaving its service functions at the Department of Justice. However, key senators and immigration experts argued that this course could undermine the critical task of reforming the INS. The GAC-endorsed legislation now transfers all immigration functions to the new Department, but specifies that the INS be disbanded and reorganized along the lines of a major, bipartisan reform bill, S. 2444, sponsored by Senators Kennedy and Brownback. These senators are the chairman and ranking member, respectively, of the immigration subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and have assembled an impressive bipartisan majority of that committee in support of their legislation. Rather than try to characterize their handiwork for them, I am attaching a letter from Senators Kennedy and Brownback describing the substance of the immigration reforms now incorporated in this legislation.

Because the work of reforming INS is very demanding, the immigration programs will be in their own directorate, with direct accountability to the Secretary, rather than included as part of the Border and Transportation Protection directorate. However, to ensure adequate coordination between immigration programs and other agencies that operate at the border, the legislation creates a Border Security Working Group. This Working Group will consist primarily of the Secretary, or his designee, and the Under Secretaries for Immigration and Border and Transportation Protection. It will meet at least four times a year, and coordinate matters including budget requests, staffing requirements, and use of equipment. This working group can also bring in other federal agencies with border operations (such as the Drug Enforcement Administration or the Food and Drug Administration) that are not part of the Department, offering a critical mechanism for government-wide coordination along the border and at ports of entry.

The legislation also gives the Secretary regulatory authority over the visa application process. Consular employees at the Department of State would continue to process visa applications. However, the Secretary would have authority to issue regulations concerning the application process. This would include the required procedures for considering an application, such as whether all applicants must be interviewed in person or what kind of identification documents would be required. In addition, the Secretary would have authority to station Departmental employees overseas to consult with State Department employees on the visa process and specific threats.

The homeland security mission will face profound technological needs and requirements, and the challenges are substantial. The first challenge derives from the fact that most research and development of new technologies relevant to homeland security will occur outside the new Department—in other agencies, academia, and the private sector. Therefore, the Department will require powerful tools and mechanisms to elicit cooperation from entities external to the Department, and to coordinate R&D efforts across a range of disparate groups, each with their own missions and priorities, in service to homeland security goals. The legislation attempts to provide the Directorate of Science and Technology with the mechanisms it needs to resolve this fundamental coordination problem. The legislation establishes a Security Advanced Research Projects Agency (SARPA), which is inspired by the highly successful Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) of the Department of Defense (DOD). Following the DARPA model, SARPA will have funding, in the form of an Acceleration Fund, to support key homeland security R&D both within and outside of the federal government, and to leverage collaboration on R&D between entities, particularly among the agencies. A second mechanism provided under the legislation is a Science and Technology Council consisting of senior R&D officials from the agencies and other appropriate entities. The Council will assist the Under Secretary in coordinating interagency efforts to execute the science and technology agenda of the Department, primarily through supporting the development of a comprehensive technology roadmap for establishing common priorities and allocating individual responsibilities. Another important mechanism is the ability to directly engage any of the Department of Energy (DOE) national laboratory and sites through joint sponsorship agreements in carrying out R&D activities for homeland security purposes. With respect to bioterrorism research, the Secretary will be able to ensure that the best researchers are focused on developing necessary countermeasures against biotreats by establishing general priorities for biotreat research programs conducted at the National Institutes of Health.

A second R&D challenge is to assure that the Directorate will have expedient access to broad, deep, and ongoing support for critical analysis and decision-making regarding scientific or technical issues. To address this issue, the legislation provides authority for the Directorate to contract with or establish Federally Funded Research and Development Centers (FFRDCs) to obtain independent analytical, scientific, and technical expertise and support, including support for risk analysis and risk management functions. In addition, an Office of Risk Analysis and Assessment is created within the Directorate to ensure that such risk analysis functions are given institutional priority and conducted internally or through outsourcing to FFRDCs.

A third challenge is for the Department to develop and effectively manage a critical mass of internal homeland security R&D capabilities. The legislation transfers a number of entities from the Department of Energy, and one to be created in the Department of Defense, that will constitute a core scientific base upon which the Department will conduct in-house R&D efforts central to its mission. Fundamental to developing this in-house expertise is the ability to procure a strong talent base and to engage them in innovative projects quickly. In view of this, the legislation affords the Secretary with flexible management tools to hire and retain top flight scientific and technical personnel, as well as to accelerate R&D and prototype projects to advance the homeland security mission.

Intelligent and coordinated deployment of technology within the Department is a fourth challenge that must be overcome. Too often, government agencies are hampered and distracted from their fundamental missions as a result of unstructured and technically unsophisticated approaches to technology acquisition and deployment that lead to interoperability problems downstream. The legislation establishes an Office for Technology Evaluation and Transition to assist the Under Secretary in his responsibilities as the chief technology officer and to assure his central role in testing, evaluating, and approving new homeland security technologies being considered by the Department for acquisition.

Lastly, the Committee recognizes that a sea of scientific and technological expertise and resources resides outside the walls of the Federal government, and has therefore included several provisions to engage the private sector in maintaining our national security. Transition of technology is emphasized throughout the section. An Advisory Panel consisting of experts from the private sector and academia may be convened by the Secretary to advise the Under Secretary and Council and promote communication with non-federal entities. The Office of Technology Evaluation and Transition described earlier will provide a gateway and clearinghouse for companies with innovative technologies relating to homeland security. This Office will also have particular responsibility for facilitating the transition of technologies into fielded systems for use by the Department, other agencies, or private sector entities. Another provision requires the Secretary to articulate a strategy and plan for encouraging biotechnology firms, pharmaceutical companies, and other entities to develop countermeasures against biological and chemical weapons, with a view towards commercial production. A fourth provision directs the Under Secretary to establish a National Emergency Technology Guard composed of teams of volunteer experts in science and technology to assist local communities in responding to and recovering from disasters requiring specialized scientific or technical skills.

Taken in combination, the mechanisms granted by the legislation provide the Department with an array of tools with which to forcefully tackle the set of R&D challenges confronting it. The legislative history and specific details regarding the legislation are discussed in greater detail below.

S. 2452, as reported out of the Committee on May 22, contained a provision establishing an Office of Science and Technology within the new Department of Homeland Security. The underlying intent of this provision was to create an R&D entity similar in organization and function to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, which was selected as an appropriate model for the Department's R&D component in light of the fact that the Department, as originally contemplated, would have had limited capability to conduct R&D internally. Consequently, it was determined that the Department could most effectively initiate and promote R&D in support of its mission through a DARPA-like entity with a lean, flexible organizational structure joined with funding to leverage external interagency collaboration. Since the release of the President's proposal for the Department, and in response to that and additional input received by the Committee from a broad range of contributors, including other Member ofices and experts from the scientific research and technology communities, the scope and responsibilities of the Office have been broadened.

The legislation redesignates the Office of Science and Technology as the "Directorate of Science and Technology" ("Directorate"), and elevates the head of the Directorate to the rank of a Senate-confirmed Under Secretary. This follows the consensus view of the National Academy of Sciences that the Directorate's chief science and technology (S&T) official requires sufficient stature to influence and coordinate S&T policies and activities outside the Department. The Under Secretary will be responsible for executing the Directorate's mission of managing and supporting R&D activities to meet national homeland security needs and objectives; articulating national R&D goals, priorities, and strategies pursuant to the mission of the Department; coordinating with entities within and outside government to advance the R&D agenda of the Department; advising the Secretary of the Department on all scientific and technical matters; facilitating the transfer and deployment of technologies critical to homeland security needs; and generally serving as the Department's chief technology officer.

The legislation provides a number of key components to assist the Directorate in meeting its mission. First among these is SARPA, the new R&D agency modeled after DARPA that was established in the original version of the legislation and is retained in the amended legislation. DARPA was created in 1958 in response to the launch of Sputnik. It is an organization that recruits outstanding scientific and technical talent and funds high-risk, high-payoff projects that offer the potential for revolutionary advances. DARPA's nimble, aggressive and creative approach has consistently produced impressive and effective war-fighting technologies. Moreover, in the course of fulfilling its central mission, DARPA has developed technologies with broad commercial and societal application, such as the Internet. Of particular significance to the Committee in selecting DARPA as a model for the S&T apparatus in the Department is DARPA's use of its funding to leverage R&D investments in other parts of DOD, effectively generating a multiplier effect that maximizes DARPA's contribution to national defense in proportion to its actual funding level. Over five decades, DARPA has been recognized as one of the most productive engines of technological innovation in the U.S. government.

While DARPA concentrates primarily on the development of revolutionary technologies, SARPA will have a broader focus consistent with its larger mission. Since there are many technologies relevant to homeland security in various stages of development and deployment, SARPA will promote a wide range of technology development, transition, and deployment efforts, as well as research for revolutionary new technologies. Nevertheless, the Committee anticipates that with an Acceleration Fund authorized at $200 million for FY03, SARPA will have the foundation for replicating or exceeding DARPA's success in catalyzing critical new technologies by initiating and leveraging R&D among public, private, or university innovators. Under an amendment offered by Senator Stevens, ten percent of the Acceleration Fund is to be allocated to Coast Guard homeland security R&D missions for FY'04 and FY'05 through a joint agreement with the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

While Congress should restrain itself in directing particular management strategies, it is the Committee's expectation that SARPA will take full advantage of evolving modern management strategies in the R&D field, particularly in assuring effective technology transition. For example, the Committee would expect SARPA to engage in a careful "needs identification" effort which involves eventual technology "users" in its R&D roadmapping and planning exercises. The Committee also expects that it operate not simply as a traditional research organization but that it explore methods to involve venture participants, incubate new technologies, encourage the startup process, facilitate prototyping, and promote strategic government and private sector supporters and investors. SARPA will also need to actively encourage connections with technology first-adopters in and out of government, and establish interactive feedback systems for technology development and deployment to ensure sustained interaction between front-line researchers and with users.

To support the Directorate and its functions, an interagency Science and Technology Council, which is the successor to the Science and Technology Steering Council contained in the original version of the legislation, will advise the Under Secretary on priorities and strategies for homeland security R&D. This Council will consist of senior R&D officials from across the government and will serve to facilitate interagency coordination on R&D activities pertinent to homeland security. One of the chief responsibilities of the Council will be to assist the Under Secretary in developing overarching technology roadmap that will enable a coherent national homeland security R&D program to be coordinated among the many federal agencies.

The Administration's proposal contemplated the designation of one of the DOE national laboratories to serve as the primary research and development center for the Department. However, in recognition of the extensive scope and nature of homeland security R&D, as well as the different research and technology-related capabilities possessed by each of the DOE laboratories and sites, the GAC-endorsed legislation establishes in the Directorate an Office for National Laboratories to coordinate and utilize such entities in creating a networked laboratory system to support the missions of the Department. Through joint sponsorship agreements with the DOE, the legislation allows the Department to easily access and benefit from the combined expertise of all of the DOE laboratories and sites.

The Department will have extraordinary analytical needs cutting across of all of its Directorates, especially with regard to the assessment, analysis, and management of threats, vulnerabilities, and risks. Although the Administration's bill did not specifically address this need, the President's Strategic Plan released in mid-July suggests that risk analysis is a fundamental issue that needs to be addressed in planning for our nation's security. Although the legislation vests ultimate responsibility for risk analysis and risk management by the Department with the Secretary, all the Directorates will be required to assist the Secretary in coordination with each other and consistent with their own missions. The Directorate of Science and Technology has a contributing role to play in this framework by providing the Secretary and the other Directorates with scientific and technical support for such functions. To ensure that the Directorate has access to the requisite resources and expertise to fulfill its risk analysis responsibilities and other research-related functions, the legislation gives the Department the power to contract with or establish FFRDCs-independent, non-profit institutions that conduct analysis and provide support integral to the mission and operation of the sponsoring agency. Thirty-six FFRDCs across the nation have proven indispensable in enabling the government to undertake research with a creativity and flexibility not always available within the confines of a federal agency. The importance of FFRDCs is underscored by a prominent study on homeland security conducted by the National Academy of Sciences, which recommended the establishment of an FFRDC to furnish capabilities related to risk analysis, scenario-based threat assessments, red teaming, and other functions. Moreover, an Office of Risk Analysis and Assessment is created within the Directorate to ensure that these functions are given institutional priority and carried out—whether internally or through outsourcing to FFRDCs—in a coordinated manner in accordance with the Secretary's requirements and overall management. This Office will assume operational responsibility within the Directorate and on behalf of the Under Secretary for supporting the risk analysis and risk management needs of the Secretary and the other Directorates, as well as help ensure that R&D activities are aligned with risks and threats.

The President's proposal included language that would grant the Department control over funds appropriated to the National Institute of Health (NIH) for bioterrorism research. Although the provision clearly contemplated that these funds would remain committed to the NIH for application in accordance with the Department's guidelines, the Committee was concerned that the provision technically allowed for such funds to be transferred to other agencies, thereby depriving the NIH of funding necessary to conduct its critical research in this area. With the collaboration of staff from the Administration and Senator Thompson's office, a final provision was negotiated under which NIH funds would not be transferred out of the HHS. Instead, through joint strategic agreements, the Secretary of the Department would set general research priorities for the funds, while the HHS would establish the specific scientific research agenda as well as award and manage all grants. This modified language will protect our strategic commitment to biodefense research, while leaving the means and methods for this research to the scientists at the NIH.

The President's proposal targeted a number of R&D entities and programs in other agencies for transfer into the Department. While the Committee does not agree with all of the Administration's transfers, it recognizes the value of providing the Department with a critical base of in-house R&D capabilities. Therefore, most of the programs targeted by the Administration have been moved, including the chemical, biological, and nuclear threat assessment and detection programs within the Department of Energy (DOE) relevant to homeland security, and the National Bio-Weapons Defense Analysis Center to be created within the Department of Defense. The transferred programs will be collectively supervised by a new Office of Laboratory Research. Together, these transferred entities will confer a basic in-house research capability with the resident scientific expertise to help the Directorate better coordinate the broader government-wide homeland R&D portfolio.

tion with R&D resources and expertise, the Department will require mechanisms to engage and benefit from private sector and academic efforts regarding homeland security. Toward this end, the legislation allows for the establishment of an Advisory Panel consisting of experts from the private sector, academia, State, and local entities to advise and support the Under Secretary and the Science and Technology Council. The Panel will ensure that a diversity of perspectives are taken into consideration in the establishment of priorities, and that the contributions to be made from the private sector are properly addressed and incorporated into the national homeland security effort.

The Directorate will also include an Office for Technology Evaluation and Transition, which will serve as a clearinghouse and national point-of-contact for companies and other entities that possess technologies relevant to homeland security. The Office will evaluate these technologies and, if appropriate, assist in developing and transitioning them into Department entities or other agencies possessing matching needs. The Technical Support Working Group (TSWG) provides an applicable model for this function, and the legislation requires the Office to coordinate with or work through TSWG, or use TSWG as a model, in performing this technology solicitation and transition role. It is also intended that this Office serve as the Department's internal center for testing and evaluating new technologies being considered for acquisition or deployment by the Department or its entities. The new Department will be a large one, and very dependent on technology in carrying out its homeland mission. As a result, it is vital that new technologies deployed in the Department's component Directorates and other entities be compatible and interoperable to ensure efficiency and expanded capability. The Office, by performing the Department's testing and evaluation function, will support the Under Secretary in carrying out his duties as the Department's chief technology officer. In addition to conducting testing and evaluation activities for the Department, the Office will also coordinate with the Department's Chief Information Officer and with other agencies in promoting government-wide compatibility and interoperability with regard to homeland security technologies and systems.

Rapidly developing medicines and antidotes to counter chemical and biological weapons is an enormous challenge and one that government-supported R&D cannot accomplish on its own. The legislation directs the Secretary to implement a strategy to engage the biotechnology and pharmaceutical industries in the critical research and product development that will produce antidotes and vaccines to the chemical and biological weapons that terrorists may employ against our nation. This strategy should explore and suggest ways to provide incentives and facilitate "bench-to-bedside" transition for these products.

Recognizing that technological prowess in this country is in communities, as well as colleges and companies, the Department must tap the boundless expertise and energy of ordinary citizens. Drawing on legislation developed in the Senate Commerce Committee, the legislation endorsed by the Committee creates a National Emergency Technology Guard of volunteers with expertise in science and technology to assist local communities in responding to and recovering from emergencies requiring scientific or technical expertise.

As reported on May 22, S. 2452 included a Directorate of Emergency Preparedness and Response, with FEMA as its core. The new GAC-endorsed legislation retains this directorate and expands it to include some of the programs the Administration proposed moving to the new department. This amendment also provides that the President may appoint the same person to serve as both the Director of FEMA and the Under Secretary for this directorate.

This directorate's responsibilities include organizing and training local entities to respond to emergencies and providing State and local authorities with equipment for detection, protection, and decontamination in an emergency involving weapons of mass destruction; overseeing Federal, State, and local emergency preparedness training and exercise programs; assembling a single Federal disaster plan to help orchestrate Federal assistance for any emergency; coordinating among private sector entities, including the health community, in emergency planning and response activities; and developing a comprehensive plan to address the interface of medical informatics and the medical response to terrorism. (Medical informatics is the scientific field that addresses the storage, retrieval, sharing, and optimal use of biomedical information, data, and knowledge for problem-solving and decision-making.) This directorate also creates a National Crisis Action Center to coordinate federal support for State and local governments and the private sector during a crisis; additionally, the directorate is responsible for ensuring the appropriate integration of operational activities of the Department of Defense, the National Guard, and other federal agencies in the Federal Response Plan in order to respond to acts of terrorism and other disasters.

In addition to FEMA, the Emergency Preparedness and Response directorate transfers the National Office of Domestic Preparedness, within the FBI. This entity was created by the Attorney General in 1998 and coordinates federal efforts to assist state and local emergency responders with training and materials necessary to respond to an event involving weapons of mass destruction. The Office of Domestic Preparedness (ODP) within the Department of Justice is also transferred. ODP was developed to help train State and local law enforcement agencies to respond to terrorist incidents.

The Administration proposed transferring the Select Agent Registration Enforcement Program from the Centers for Disease Control within the Department of Health and Human Services, to the Department. The Select Agent Registration Enforcement Program was developed to identify all biological agents and toxins that may threaten public health and safety, regulate the transfer of such agents and toxins, and establish a registration scheme regulating their possession, use, and transfer. The GAC-endorsed legislation transfers this program to the Emergency Preparedness and Response directorate because it is a program critical to preparing for and responding to a public health emergency. The Under Secretary for Science and Technology, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention will work together to establish and update the list of toxins to be monitored.

Like the Administration's proposal, the GAC-endorsed legislation transfers the Strategic National Stockpile to the new department. The Strategic National Stockpile is a stockpile of drugs and vaccines that may be used in the event of a terrorist attack or other emergencies. However, because of CDC's experience and expertise, the legislation allows for the Stockpile to be managed on a day-to-day basis for the Department by CDC through a new Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division, which is created in this legislation pursuant to an amendment from Senator Cleland. However, the Department would remain in charge of the overall strategic planning concerning the Stockpile. The Public Health Emergency and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002 authorized funds for both the Stockpile and the acquisition of smallpox vaccine doses and potassium iodide. Consequently, the GAC-endorsed legislation transfers responsibility for the acquisition of smallpox doses and potassium iodide to this directorate as well.

Finally, the Administration also proposed transferring the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Preparedness (OPHP) from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Emergency Preparedness and Response directorate. This office has three primary components: (1) the awarding and administration of state and local grants for public health preparedness; (2) the Principal Science Advisor, who advises the Secretary on the global R&D strategy for HHS; and, (3) the Office of Emergency Preparedness, which manages rapid-response emergency health and first-responder personnel. From this Office of the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Preparedness, the GAC-endorsed legislation transfers the Office of Emergency Preparedness.

The other two components of the OPHP each play a role in emergency response, but also a very extensive role in general public health. Because they perform a dual-use function, and because of their extensive interaction with other parts of HHS, it does not seem appropriate to transfer them to the new department. Additionally, experts in the public health and biomedical communities expressed concern that the Administration's proposal would not operate effectively. The OPHP was established to address the problems of intra-agency communication and coordination, and it could reverse the gains achieved by this office to remove it from the department with which it is primarily engaged. Indeed, HHS would probably be forced to re-create this capacity internally if OPHP were transferred to the Department.

At the same time, it is important the Department have in-house capability to address biological, chemical, and nuclear weapons. Consequently, the Department would include those public health and biomedical programs—the OEP, the Select Agent Registration Enforcement Programs, and the Strategic National Stockpile—which focus primarily on terrorism and emergency response.

SECRET SERVICE

The legislation adopts the Administration's proposal to include the United States Secret Service as a distinct entity reporting directly to the Secretary. The Service has a dual mission of protection and investigation, with a central focus on preventing attacks and other missions now very relevant to terrorist threats. The Service was originally created to safeguard the country's currency and financial payment systems, and it remains the sole agency charged with enforcing the counterfeiting statutes. Its responsibility for protecting the country's financial infrastructure has led to an expansion of the Service's investigative mission, which now includes crimes involving identity theft, credit card fraud, false identification documents, computer fraud, and financial institution fraud. In addition, the Secret Service is well-known for its mission to protect the nation's highest elected leaders and their families, as well as visiting heads of state. In recent years, the Secret Service has assumed responsibility for planning, coordinating, and implementing security operations at National Special Security Events, as designated by the President. It also has created the National Threat Assessment Center, which provides advice and training to law enforcement and other organizations with responsibilities to investigate or prevent targeted violence.

The missions of the Secret Service have a clear connection to the fundamental mission of the new Department. Its protective mission is central to safeguarding the country's leadership. Many of the crimes it is charged with investigating involve activities in which terrorists often engage. And it is an agency that is uniquely focused on assessing vulnerabilities and designing ways to reduce them in advance of an attack, an expertise that will benefit the new Department. The responsibilities and experience of the Secret Service support its transfer as a separate office reporting directly to the Secretary rather than its inclusion in one of the Directorates. This structure will allow the Service to draw on the expertise and resources of the Directorates to support its protective mission, as well as to provide its own expertise and experience to the rest of the Department.

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT COORDINATION

Homeland security is clearly a joint responsibility among the Federal, State, and local governments. There are many ways in which the bill recognizes the importance of these relationships and places a high priority on ensuring that the Department works closely with, and provides significant assistance to, State and local agencies. To coordinate this effort, the Department will have an office devoted to facilitating effective communications and partnerships with State and local government. The Office for State and Local Government Coordination will be established within the office of the Secretary to ensure that the needs and role of State and local governments are considered throughout the work of each of the Department's directorates. In addition to coordinating the activities of the Department relating to State and local governments, the Office will be responsible for assessing and advocating for the resources needed by State and local government to implement the national strategy for combating terrorism. This advocacy function is necessary so that budget decisions to implement the national strategy are made with the full understanding of the role that State and local governments will play in implementing the strategy, as well as the resources necessary at all levels of government for success.

The Secretary, in conjunction with the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, is responsible for working with State and local governments to develop a national strategy for combating terrorism—not simply a Federal strategy. Thus, the Office for State and Local Government Coordination will develop a process for receiving meaningful input from State and local government to assist in the development of the strategy for homeland security and other homeland activities. The Office will also provide State and local government with regular information, research, and technical support to assist local efforts at securing the homeland.

The GAC-endorsed legislation incorporates an amendment, offered by Senators Collins and Carper, which creates the position of Chief Homeland Security Liaison Officer, who is charged with coordinating the efforts of homeland security liaison officers in each state. These liaison officers will work with State and local first responders to make sure that these organizations receive the training and resources they need. A Federal Inter-agency Committee on First Responders will bring together the federal agencies that work most closely with State and local first responders and will be counseled by an Advisory Council, including representatives of first responders and urban and rural communities.

To further encourage communication and coordination between the Department and State and local agencies, the GAC-endorsed legislation authorizes the Secretary to establish an employee exchange program. This program—which was suggested by Senator Voinovich—would allow employees of the Department and State and local agencies with homeland security responsibilities to work together, to share their specialized expertise, and to enhance their ability to assess threats against the country, develop appropriate responses, and inform the public. Employees who participate in the program must have appropriate training or experience to perform the work required by the assignment, and assignments must be structured to appropriately safeguard classified and other sensitive information.

OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

The legislation includes an amendment offered by Senator Thompson that creates an Office of International Affairs within the office of the Secretary. The Director of the Office will be responsible for promoting the exchange of information with foreign nations to encourage sharing of best practices and technologies relating to homeland security. This information exchange will include joint research and development on countermeasures, joint training exercises for first responders, exchange programs, and international conferences. The Director will manage the activities under this provision in consultation with the Department of State and other relevant Federal officials. These programs will be developed first with countries that are already highly focused on homeland security issues and that have previously engaged in fruitful cooperation with the United States in the area of counterterrorism.

MANAGEMENT AND TRANSITION ISSUES

Management structure

The Administration's proposed legislation calls for the appointment of a number of management officials to support the Secretary in carrying out the mission of the Department. The Committee-endorsed legislation includes much, though not all, of the management structure proposed by the Administration.

Secretary—First and foremost, the Committee-endorsed legislation calls for a strong Secretary, vested with effective, centralized management authority over what will be a large new organization. Although responsibilities under this legislation are allocated among the various Directorates, it is intended that all powers provided under this bill be subject to the full control and direction of the Secretary. Also, while the bill establishes the basic organizational framework for the new Department and establishes its principal components, carrying out this organizational task is only part of the role that the new Secretary must play. While a number of more subjective management factors cannot be defined in statutory language, we anticipate that the new Secretary will need to spend a great deal of time on key management tasks that cannot be embodied in a formal organizational structure. These tasks include: creating a sense of shared values across the new Department and its disparate components; ensuring that core skills and competencies are both developed and shared across the Department; developing an effective common departmental strategy for achieving the agency's missions with buy-in among component agencies; deciding on the key systems and management processes apart from the organizational structure that will manage and bind together the new Department; assuring that the success of those systems and processes are measured and evaluated frequently to test their performance; ensuring that departmental personnel gain experience in a variety of agency components to encourage cross-agency thinking, capability, and solutions so that the synergy of a new Department can be realized, and establishing a leadership style that will create a strong organizational culture based on the values and attitudes the new Department must have to effectively perform its mission. The bill aims to create a structure that will enable the new Secretary to carry out these critical management efforts.

The Department will be headed by a Presidentially appointed, Senate-confirmed Secretary. The Secretary's duties include developing policies and plans for the promotion of homeland security, carrying out and promoting the other established missions of entities transferred to the Department, and developing a comprehensive strategy for combating terrorism and the homeland security response in conjunction with the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism.

The Secretary is charged with consulting with the Secretary of Defense and the nation's governors to integrate the National Guard into the nation's strategy to combat terrorism. The Secretary must also consult and coordinate with the Secretary of Defense regarding military organization, equipment, and assets that are critical to fighting terrorism, as well as the training of personnel to respond to terrorist attacks involving chemical or biological agents.

Section 102 details numerous other duties of the Secretary.

Deputy Secretary—Section 103 provides for appointment of a Deputy Secretary, subject to Senate confirmation, responsible for assisting the Secretary.

Under Secretary for Management—The Administration proposal calls for the appointment of an Under Secretary for Management with broad responsibilities for management and administration of the Department. Section 104 of the Committee-endorsed bill establishes this position with substantially the same responsibilities as in the Administration bill. These include budget and other financial matters, procurement, human resources and personnel, information technology and communications, facilities and other material resources, security for the Department, and managing performance measures for the Department.

Assistant Secretaries—The Administration requested authority for the President to appoint not more than six Senate-confirmed Assistant Secretaries, without specifying in statute what the responsibilities of these officers would be. Following generally the Administration's approach, section 105 of the legislation authorizes the President to appoint up to five such Assistant Secretaries

(these do not include the two additional, Senate-confirmed Assistant Secretary positions, with immigration-related functions, established in division B of the legislation.) The President must describe the general responsibilities when submitting a nominee for confirmation. The authority of the President to assign functions to up to five Assistant Secretaries should provide important flexibility in designing the management structure for the Department.

Inspector General—The Department will include an office of Inspector General under the Inspector General Act of 1978, thereby applying the authorities and independence provided under that Act. The legislation would define a narrow set of circumstances under which the Secretary could prohibit the Inspector General from carrying out an investigation or performing other duties if necessary in the interest of national security or other compelling circumstances specified in the legislation. This language is modeled closely on provisions that apply to the Inspectors General at the Departments of Justice, Defense, and Treasury, the United States Postal Service, and the Central Intelligence Agency. Also modeled closely on provisions applicable at Treasury, is a provision granting the Homeland Security IG oversight over internal investigations performed by any other investigatory offices where they exist in the Department's sub-agencies. The Inspector General must designate an official to collect and review information about alleged abuses of civil rights and civil liberties by Department officers and employees, and report to Congress on such abuses.

Chief Financial Officer—The legislation would establish a Chief Financial Officer (CFO) and a Chief Information Officer (CIO) at the new Department. Section 107 would define the Department as an agency under the CFO Act, thereby making applicable the requirements of the CFO Act of 1994, regarding, for example, the qualifications and responsibilities of the CFO and annual financial reporting. Under the CFO Act, the CFO at the Department must be either appointed by the President subject to Senate confirmation, or designated by the President, in consultation with the Secretary, from among Senate-confirmed officials at the Department.

Chief Information Officer—Section 108 of the legislation would establish a Chief Information Officer (CIO) at the new Department. Furthermore, the provisions of law defining the responsibilities of the CIO, including the Paperwork Reduction Act and Clinger-Cohen, would apply by their own terms to the new Department. Under applicable law, the CIO need not be Senate-confirmed.

Chief Human Capital Officer—The Secretary must appoint or designate a Chief Human Capital Officer to advise and assist the Department in workforce skills, training, recruitment, retention, and other issues necessary to attract and retain a highly qualified workforce.

Civil Rights Office—Section 110 of the bill establishes a Civil Rights Office, whose head will be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Office will have two important functions. First, the Civil Rights Office will have responsibility for coordinating the administration of and ensuring compliance with laws prohibiting discrimination against Department employees and beneficiaries of Department programs (see, e.g., 42 U.S.C. §§2000d, 2000e-16).

Second, it will advise the Secretary, as well as the Department's directorates and offices, on the constitutional and statutory framework that governs the Department's interactions with the citizenry at large and help develop and implement policies that ensure that consideration of this group's civil rights are appropriately incorporated and implemented in Department programs and activities. It also will oversee the Department's compliance with requirements related to the civil rights of individuals affected by the Department's programs and activities. Authority to investigate specific complaints by the citizenry at large of civil rights or civil liberties violations, however, will reside in the Office of the Inspector General, to which the Civil Rights Office will refer any matter that, in the opinion of the Civil Rights Officer, warrants further investigation.

Privacy Officer—A Chief Privacy Officer will oversee the Department's compliance with privacy laws and help ensure that personal information is appropriately safeguarded. Several federal agencies that deal with sensitive personal information, such as the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. Postal Service, currently have similar privacy advocates to aid in the development of policies and provide assistance to agency officials. The Chief Privacy Officer's mandate extends beyond overseeing compliance with existing privacy laws, such as the Privacy Act, and includes assisting in the development of policies that incorporate privacy safeguards and minimize the risk of inappropriate disclosure or use of personal information. The Privacy Officer may also assist in the development of privacy impact assessments, when required by law or considered appropriate by the Secretary, which are documents that explain how an agency takes into account privacy considerations when initiating information collections and developing information systems.

The Constitution clearly assigns to Congress what is called the "power of the purse"—the power to appropriate funds and to prescribe the conditions governing the use of those funds. The Framers thus made Congress responsible to the people for how the people's money gets spent. The legislation contains provisions reaffirming that appropriated funds may be used only for the purposes stated by Congress. To provide for initial funding of the Department, the legislation requires the Administration to submit a transition plan and proposed budget by September 15, 2002, so that Congress can appropriate timely start-up funds based on that proposal.

By contrast, the Administration has requested that the new Department be exempted from the traditional arrangements regarding the use of appropriated funds. For initial funding for the Department, the Administration proposed to take funds (up to 5%) from each agency slated for transfer to the Department and use these funds for any purpose under the legislation. This could total roughly $2 billion. To adjust funding priorities without having to go back to Congress, the Administration requested permanent power to take funds (up to 5%) from each appropriations account in the Department and use those funds for any other purpose in the Department.

Senator Byrd and Senator Stevens, the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Appropriations Committee, respectively, wrote to me expressing their strong legal objection to the appropriation transfer provisions requested by the Administration:

"The proposal by the President provides the new Secretary with extraordinary powers, powers that could potentially tip the delicate balance of constitutional powers between the Legislative and Executive branches of government. These are powers that the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State do not currently have, nor should they have. The Framers carefully crafted that balance, and it has served the nation well for more than 200 years."

Senators Byrd and Stevens also requested that the legislation include provisions to sustain existing law and practice governing the use of appropriated funds, and language that they agreed to is included in the legislation. These provisions are designed to provide for establishment of the Department, while preserving the customary and Constitutional role of Congress in appropriating funds and in ensuring that such funds are used effectively and efficiently and according to the will of the people, as expressed through their elected Senators and Representatives.

Under the legislation, initial funding for the Department will be provided through appropriations Acts, not through transfer of funds appropriated for other purposes. To provide this initial funding in a timely fashion, the legislation requires the President to submit a transition plan by September 15, 2002, including a proposal for financing the initial operations of the Department. The financing proposal might consist of any combination of specific appropriations transfers, specific reprogrammings, or specific new appropriations. By putting the Administration on notice, even before the legislation is enacted, this provision has given the Administration ample time to submit their plan while Congress still has time to act on the Administration's proposal.

To further clarify that initial funding will be provided by appropriations acts, the legislation states that transferred funds may only be used for their original purposes unless Congress approves in advance a reallocation of such funds. This provision does not limit the ability of an agency transferred to the Department to use transferred funds for a new position previously authorized in law, but does reinforce that transferred funds may not be used to fund a new position established under this legislation itself.

Looking beyond the transition period, the Administration sought to justify its request for power to transfer appropriations by stating, in the analysis accompanying the Administration's proposed legislation: "Appropriations transfer provisions are enacted annually in a number of appropriations acts." While declining now to grant the broad, permanent transfer power requested by the Administration, this Committee-endorsed legislation does not address whether any power to transfer funds should subsequently be included in annual appropriations acts for the Department. In fact, annual appropriations bills often build in such flexibility, but more often in smaller amounts under close oversight by Congress. The proper way for the Administration to seek this authority is to request it as part of their annual appropriations, not as permanent authority in the enabling legislation.

The Committee concluded that the Congress and the Executive Branch must fully understand the annual and multi-year funding requirements for the Department to ascertain the most appropriate funding levels to protect the American people from homeland security threats.

Accordingly, the GAC-endorsed legislation requires the new Department, beginning with the fiscal year 2005 budget request, to submit annually a Future Years Homeland Security Program to accompany the annual departmental budget request and the National Terrorism Prevention and Response Program Budget mandated elsewhere in the Committee-approved legislation. The language requires that Future Years Homeland Security Program be structured, and include the same type of information and level of detail, as the Future Years Defense Program required by statute to be submitted to the Congress by the Department of Defense.

S. 2452, as reported on May 22, set an effective date of 180 days after enactment for the transfer of personnel and assets to the new Department, and included "savings provisions" to generally preserve the status quo with respect to the ongoing missions of the agencies being transferred. The Administration's subsequent proposed legislation requested greater flexibility with respect to the timing of the transition by giving the President discretion to move agencies at any time over a one-year transition period. It also requested further flexibilities to enable the Administration to make certain incidental transfers and to allocate transferred assets and personnel.

The GAC-approved legislation now includes, in subtitle B of title XI, transition provisions based on the corresponding provisions of the Administration's proposed legislation. These provisions include most of the transition-related flexibilities requested by the Administration. The principal exceptions are that, under the GAC-endorsed legislation, the Administration would not have the flexibility to use funds, appropriated by Congress for one purpose, for a different purpose (discussed above), or in the area of withdrawing collective bargaining rights from personnel transferred or employed in the new Department.

Following the Administration's approach, the Committee-approved legislation adopts from the Administration bill an effective date and a "transition period"—the effective date is generally 30 days after enactment (unless enacted less than 30 days before January 1, 2003, in which case that is the effective date), and the "transition period" is the one year period following the effective date. The President is then authorized to direct the transfer of any asset to the Department at any time the President directs, up to the end of the transition period. This should allow agencies to be transferred to the Department in an orderly progression, leaving the Administration free to determine which are in a position to be transferred first.

This legislation, by bringing numerous agencies responsible for homeland security together for the first time under a single chain-of-command responsible for policy and funding, represents one of the most significant reorganizations of the Federal government. However, once these agencies are consolidated into one Department, further reorganization of offices and functions at the departmental level may be needed to integrate incoming offices and to gain additional coordination, efficiency, and effectiveness. The legislation provides for departmental reorganization, by: (1) authorizing the Secretary to reorganize unilaterally to the extent consistent with applicable law; and (2) instructing the Secretary to recommend legislation enabling specific further reorganization involving organizational structures established in law.

The Administration has not offered a proposal for departmental reorganization for consideration by Congress, but, instead, requested that the Secretary be granted the power generally to conduct such reorganizations unilaterally. Under the Administration's proposal, the only limits on this reorganization power would be that the Secretary could not abolish the Secret Service or the Coast Guard, and the Secretary would have to give Congress 90 days notice before overriding a statute.

Many of the statutes establishing entities and assigning functions reflect important policy judgments of Congress and ongoing critical missions required by law, however, and it would be inappropriate for Congress to cede to the executive the power to override these statutes unilaterally, without opportunity for Congress to evaluate, debate, and decide. This view was also expressed by a Senator Byrd and Senator Stevens, the leaders of the Senate Appropriations Committee, in a letter stating their objection to a provision in the President's proposal:

"Congress should not authorize the Executive Branch to establish, consolidate, alter, or discontinue agencies of government that are established in statute. This is Congress' responsibility."

The legislation establishes reorganization authorities and procedures designed to enable the Secretary to achieve an efficient and effective structure for the Department, while maintaining the appropriate role of Congress in deciding whether statutory law should be changed. Under section 191 of the bill, the Secretary can proceed, without further congressional approval, with any reorganization that does not change organizational structure established by law. The Secretary can perform substantial reorganization and consolidation under this authority. For example, agency units responsible for human resources, information technology or other management functions are typically not established in law, so the Secretary could conduct substantial reorganization and consolidation of such functions to make them more efficient and effective.

Furthermore, as the Secretary identifies specific entities established in law that he or she believes should be reorganized, the legislation instructs the Secretary to submit recommendations to Congress on an ongoing basis for legislation providing for such reorganization. Specifically, section 185(d)(1)(B) of the legislation requires the Secretary to recommend any legislation that the Secretary determines necessary to "reorganize agencies, executive positions, and the assignment of functions within the Department." Anticipating that the Secretary may develop reorganization proposals over the one-year transition period, the bill does not require the Secretary to submit these recommendations as a single reorganization plan, but rather requires submission of these recommendations as they become available, the first no later than 6 months after enactment of the Act and any subsequent recommendations at least every 6 months thereafter until 6 months after the transition is completed.

The legislation specifies that several of the agencies transferred to Department—i.e., the United States Customs Service, the United States Coast Guard, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and the United States Secret Service—each "shall be maintained as a distinct entity within the Department." This requirement does not impose precise constraints on the Secretary's authority to reorganize with respect to these agencies, since each of these agencies is established by law and this legislation prohibits the Secretary from reorganizing in contravention of such law. Instead, the "distinct entity" requirements serves as an instruction to the President and Secretary that Congress intends that the unique identity of each of these four agencies should be preserved.

Under current law, the President and Secretary can reward excellence, remove poorly performing employees, offer recruitment bonuses, and use many other performance-oriented management tools. In an effort to give the Department and other agencies additional flexibility in the management of personnel, our legislation adopts significant, government-wide civil service reforms, contained in provisions proposed by Senators Voinovich and Akaka. To support research and development, we also provided the Secretary of Homeland Security authority to use innovative techniques to hire talent and fund projects. Taken together, this package will give the Secretary the ability to: speed up staffing of new employees; recruit and retain top science and technology talent; procure temporary services outside the civil service system when there is a critical need; reshape the workforce; reform old competitive-hiring practices; provide more effective bonuses for exemplary performance; promote procurement flexibility in research, development, the prototyping of new technologies, and other procurement; and make additional valuable changes to help the new Department attract, maintain, and motivate the best talent. These reforms represent a major modernization of the way federal agencies are managed.

SEN. VOINOVICH'S AND SEN. AKAKA'S AMENDMENT

Division C of the legislation contains important provisions to strengthen significantly the management of the federal workforce government-wide that were offered at the Committee's business meeting by Senators Voinovich and Akaka, and were agreed to by the Committee by voice vote.

The Voinovich-Akaka amendment establishes a chief human capital officer (CHCO) at each major agency (i.e., at the agencies required to have Chief Financial Officers under the CFO Act). The primary responsibility is to advise and assist their respective directors in selecting, developing, training, and managing a high-quality workforce. The creation of a CHCO is intended to help identify and prioritize the recruitment, retention, and workforce management needs across the government. The CHCO will have added importance in the new Department, because consolidation of the different agencies into the Department will pose unique recruitment, retention, training, and workforce management challenges. The CHCO will heighten awareness of workforce issues and provide leadership in resolving these issues.

Another section of the Voinovich-Akaka provision, Section 2202 in the GAC-endorsed legislation, allows agencies to hire candidates directly and bypass the current civil-service hiring requirements once the Office of Personnel Management has determined that there is a severe shortage of candidates for the position. This provision also allows agencies to streamline its staffing procedures by authorizing more flexible merit assessment tools. This will make the government more competitive with the private sector by improving the federal hiring process.

The Voinovich-Akaka provisions include government-wide authority for Voluntary Separation Incentive Payments and Voluntary Early Retirement Authority, two programs currently allowed only in limited situations. The expansion of this authority would give agencies the flexibility required to reorganize the workforce should an agency need to undergo substantial consolidation, transfer of functions, or other substantial workforce reshaping. The provision would allow agencies to reduce high-grade, managerial, or supervisory positions, correct skill imbalances, and reduce operating costs without being forced to reduce overall staff levels.

The Voinovich-Akaka proposal increases the cap on the total annual compensation of senior executives, Administrative Law Judges, officers of the court, and other senior level positions to allow career executives to receive performance awards and other authorized payments within the cap in a single year. This will enable agencies to better reward excellence in the ranks of the most senior and experienced parts of the workforce. It also includes measures to help federal employees earn academic degrees, a step that will help enable agencies to build a highly trained workforce and retain valuable employees who wish to continue their education. To fill the serious gap in foreign language skills across the federal government, which is a particular homeland security problem, Section 2402 eases the restrictions on placement of National Security Education Program (NSEP) fellows who are proficient in languages critical to our national security. The provision would allow NSEP fellows to work in a non-national security position in the federal government, including a homeland security position, if a national security position is not available.

These authorities complement the flexible authority in Section 135 enabling the Science and Technology Directorate to attract outstanding scientists and technologists.

All these detailed and carefully considered personnel provisions provide the Administration with a major management opportunity and flexibility.

It is our responsibility to ensure that Federal agencies with a role in homeland security can purchase—quickly and efficiently—the most high-tech and sophisticated products and services to support antiterrorism efforts and to defend against biological, chemical, nuclear, or radiological attacks. Last year's National Defense Authorization Act provided the Department of Defense with many of these authorities. Title V of this bill provides to other Federal agencies—including the new Department—emergency contracting authority which is already in place for the Department of Defense. This measure also provides certain new contracting flexibility to these agencies, including raising the threshold amount for contracts carried out in the United States to $250,000 and raising the threshold amount for contracts outside the United States to $500,000. Title V also raises the micro-purchase (purchase card) threshold to $10,000.

Title V would give Federal agencies new procurement flexibility in fighting terrorism. It would streamline procurement procedures for contingency operations or peacekeeping and humanitarian operations; permit agencies to use more "commercial-style" contracting procedures for technologies or products which are cutting-edge; and require agencies to do ongoing market research to identify new companies, including small businesses, with new capabilities to help agencies in the fight against terrorism.

Title V also requires that the Comptroller General complete a review of the extent to which procurements and services have been made in accordance with this subtitle and submit a report on the results of the review.

There is a one year sunset for these provisions.

This authority complements the flexible procurement authority in Section 135 concerning R&D and technology prototyping.

The Committee-approved legislation authorizes the Secretary to hire experts and consultants, in accordance with existing law, for periods of up to one year and subject to a pay cap equivalent to the GS-15 level. However, the amendment provides additional hiring flexibility to the Secretary by expanding his authority under current law if necessary to meet urgent homeland security needs. In such cases, the Secretary may obtain personal services, including those of experts or consultants, for periods not to exceed one year without a ceiling on the amount of compensation that may be paid to those individuals. These provisions will allow the Secretary to meet critical needs of the Department by securing the services of individuals with specialized experience and expertise.

During the Cold War, Presidents acquired the power to take away—by executive order—the collective bargaining rights of particular agencies or subdivisions when he determines that national security is at stake. Agency managers may also remove from collective bargaining individual employees engaged in certain kinds of work directly affecting national security, subject to review by the independent Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA).

Most of the tens of thousands of employees that will make up the new Department will be transferred from existing federal agencies, and the Congressional Research Service estimates that about 43,000 (mostly in the Customs Service, the INS, the Coast Guard and FEMA) are now represented by unions. Thus far, no President—including President Bush—has tried to deny collective bargaining rights to these workers. Nevertheless, these existing employees are fearful they will lose their collective bargaining rights simply by virtue of being transferred to a department organized around a mission of homeland security—even if their duties remain substantially the same.

The Committee-approved legislation seeks to provide these employees some reassurance. It provides that, for offices and employees transferred into the Department with pre-existing rights to unionize, those rights may not be withdrawn on an office-wide basis by executive order. However, the legislation still provides the Administration ample authority to remove collective bargaining rights if national security is at issue. These rights can be withdrawn from individual employees if their primary job duty materially changes and consists of intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative duties related to terrorism investigation and their membership in a collective-bargaining unit would adversely affect national security. If so, following existing procedures, Department managers may remove employees from collective bargaining immediately upon determining that such action is warranted, subject to review by the FLRA. Thus, for the employees of offices transferred to the Department with existing rights to form a union, the Committee-endorsed legislation allows the Administration to immediately take employees out of collective bargaining to protect national security, but requires the Administration to state clear reasons for doing so and allows for due process review.

Furthermore, with respect to newly created offices at the Department, the legislation retains the President's authority to remove collective bargaining rights from an entire office by executive order, if the primary function of the office is intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative duties directly related to terrorism investigation, and if collective bargaining rights cannot be applied consistent with national security.

It is important to remember that bargaining rights of Federal employees are very limited compared to the private sector. Federal employees have no right to strike. Most have their salary and benefits set in statute. And they may not bargain over, or agree to, anything that would affect managers' statutory prerogatives, which include hiring, firing, assigning personnel and work, as well as taking any necessary action during an emergency.

The Committee-approved legislation provides that any construction work financed by assistance under this legislation will be subject to the Davis-Bacon Act, which requires the payment of prevailing wages. The prevailing wage under Davis-Bacon means the local average wage, as determined by the Secretary of Labor.

The Davis-Bacon Act itself applies to federal construction contracts, and, in addition, Davis-Bacon requirements have been incorporated into more than 50 program statutes that provide assistance to non-federal parties for construction. For example, federal assistance programs that apply Davis-Bacon requirements include: a variety of transportation construction grant programs (including interstate highways, mass transportation, airport improvement); FEMA emergency preparedness grants; various environmental programs (including drinking and waste water treatment, and Superfund clean-up).

Like these other statutes, the Committee-endorsed legislation would require the payment of prevailing wages in any construction supported by assistance under this legislation. For example, under the Emergency Preparedness Enhancement Pilot Program under section 153, the Department may award grants for the deployment of innovative emergency preparedness technologies. If such a grant is used for construction, the contractor would have to pay the prevailing wage. Section 194 would not affect grant programs that are not under this legislation, even if administered by the Department, however. For example, under the Stafford Act, Davis-Bacon applies to FEMA grants for emergency preparedness, but not to FEMA's grants for disaster relief. Thus, disaster relief under the Stafford Act will remain exempt from Davis-Bacon even after FEMA and its disaster-relief functions are transferred to the new Department.

At the request of Senator Thompson, the legislation incorporates the text of S. 2530, granting some law enforcement authorities to certain Inspectors General. That bill was reported out of the Governmental Affairs Committee on June 25, 2002. Briefly, the proposal amends the Inspector General Act to authorize certain IG officers to carry a firearm or make an arrest in certain instances while engaged in official duties as authorized by this Act or other statute, or by a request from the Attorney General, and to seek and execute warrants under the authority of the United States upon probable cause that a violation has been committed. A full description of the proposal and its legislative history can be found in the accompanying Committee report, No. 107-176.

The GAC-endorsed legislation will ensure that information systems are effectively deployed in the new Department and government-wide. Improved management of information resources is a vital aspect of enhanced homeland security. Federal agencies have deployed information systems in stovepipes, with little thought given to interoperability with the systems of other agencies. Interoperable information systems would allow for efficient sharing of data and better communications between agencies responsible for intelligence gathering, border security, crisis response, and other homeland security missions. Agencies vital to homeland security are also plagued by poor information security and outdated technologies. These management challenges need to be addressed both within the new Department and government-wide.

The legislation contains several new provisions that impose general mandates and establish accountability mechanisms with respect to information systems within the Department. The Secretary is required to direct the acquisition and management of the Departments information resources, including the information systems of agencies being transferred into the Department. In ensuring proper Department-wide management, the Secretary will be assisted by the Chief Information Officer. The Secretary is responsible for making the Department's information systems effective, efficient, secure, and interoperable, and will report to Congress on the implementation of an enterprise architecture for the Department. The CIO will work closely with the Under Secretary for Science and Technology on the development, testing, and deployment of new IT technologies.

The need for more effective cooperation between agencies such as the FBI, CIA, Department of State, and INS has become obvious, yet poorly developed information systems are getting in the way when technology should be enhancing agencies' effectiveness. The federal government has barely addressed the inability of agencies to link up their information systems. Pursuant to language proposed by Sen. Durbin, the legislation requires the OMB Director to develop a comprehensive enterprise architecture for information systems of agencies related to homeland security, and to make sure agencies implement the plan. The architecture and resulting systems must be designed so that they can achieve interoperability between federal agencies responsible for homeland defense, that they are capable of being deployed quickly and upgraded with improved technologies, and that effective information security is maintained. The OMB Director and the Secretary will also facilitate improved interoperability between information systems of Federal, State and local agencies responsible for homeland defense.

Enterprise architectures require systematically thinking through the relationship between operations and underlying information technologies. Used increasingly by industry and some governments, they can reduce redundancies, modernize operations, and improve program performance.

The Committee-approved legislation includes a key compromise on the public disclosure of certain sensitive information that may be submitted to the Department—one that thoughtfully balances the public's right to know and the legitimate security concerns of private entities that may share information with the Department. Specifically, the legislation provides that records pertaining to the vulnerability of—and threats to—critical infrastructure that are voluntarily furnished to the Department and that are not customarily made public by the provider, are not subject to public disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. Furthermore, the provision would not limit the disclosure of a record used to satisfy a legal obligation or to obtain a permit or other government approval, or received by another Federal, State, or local agency independently of the Department.

Senators Bennett and Levin offered this provision at the business meeting. The language of the provision had also been developed in conjunction with the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator Leahy. Senator Bennett explained to the Committee that the amendment addresses the concerns of three groups—the federal government, which wants to receive information from the private sector in order to better understand and address vulnerabilities and threats to critical infrastructure; the private sector, which has said it would like to help the government, but not if it would be disadvantaged by disclosure of sensitive information; and the public-access and environmental communities, which did not want public access diminished to information that is of importance to the public. Senators Bennett and Levin told the Committee that all three of these interested groups found the amendment acceptable. Senator Bennett further reported that the Administration had examined the provision and supported it as well.

To safeguard against the erosion of non-security programs within the transferred entities, the revised legislation establishes a reporting requirement designed to monitor the performance of non-homeland security missions by entities transferred to the Department—pursuant to an amendment by Senators Akaka and Carper. For each of the first five years after a program or agency is transferred to the Department, the relevant Under Secretary must report to the Secretary, the Comptroller General, and Congress regarding the performance of that entity, with particular emphasis on non-homeland security missions. These reports shall seek to inventory non-homeland security capabilities, including the personnel, budgets, and flexibilities used to carry out those functions. The reports shall include information regarding whether any changes are required to enable the transferred entities to continue to carry out non-homeland security missions without diminishment. Under another provision, the Comptroller General is also required to submit reports to Congress that include an evaluation of how successfully the Department is meeting homeland security and other missions.

FIREFIGHTERS

The legislation includes an amendment by Senators Carnahan and Collins to provide federal assistance to local communities to hire additional firefighters, who clearly play a critical first responder role for terrorist threats. The amendment amends the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974 to authorize the Director of FEMA to award 3-year grants to local communities to hire additional firefighters. It would fund 75% of a firefighter's salary and benefits over three years. Communities applying for grants under the program would be required to present a plan for how they will fund the position at the conclusion of the third year. The three-year cost is capped at $100,000 per fire fighter. The amendment authorizes $1 billion for FY 2003 and FY 2004 for this program. If fully appropriated, the amendment would provide funding for as many as 10,000 new firefighters each year, able to play a vital role in terrorism response.

The amendment addresses a critical and urgent need. Federal programs currently exist to fund training and equipment for firefighters and other first responders, and more funding for these needs has been proposed in response to the events of September 11. However, no Federal funds have been made available to fund personnel even though the staffing shortage in the nation's fire departments has reached crisis proportions. Two-thirds of all fire departments do not have adequate staffing, falling below the accepted industry consensus standards developed by the National Fire Protection Association. According to the International Association of Firefighters, most fire departments are not able to comply with OSHA's "two-in/two-out" standard for safe fire ground operations. These standards require that if two firefighters enter a dangerous environment, there must be at least two firefighters stationed outside to perform a rescue operation if needed.

The International Association of Fire Chiefs estimates that 75,000 additional fire fighters are needed to bring fire department staffing up to minimally acceptable levels for safety and effective response. In addition, investigations into firefighter fatalities conducted by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) over the past decade have consistently identified inadequate staffing as either the primary cause or a significant contributing factor to the death of the firefighter. Clearly, without additional assistance, our firefighters' lives are being jeopardized.

The Carnahan/Collins amendment reflects broad consensus that in order to protect the public against acts of terrorism and other dangers, the nation's fire departments must have adequate personnel, training, and equipment. One of the major purposes of the Department will be to assess and advocate for the resource needs of State and local governments. The need for more firefighters has already been well documented and thus it is appropriate that this issue be addressed now.

The amendment includes an amendment offered by Senators Carper and Torricelli that authorizes funding for Amtrak to finance system-wide safety and security, make life safety improvements to critical rail tunnels, and help ensure Amtrak has adequate fleet capacity in the event of a national security emergency. This funding is authorized to be appropriated to the Department over two years for Amtrak and will remain available until obligated.

Pursuant to an amendment by Sen. Durbin, the GAC-endorsed legislation would require the Secretary to enter into an agreement with and provide funding to the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a detailed and comprehensive review of Federal statutes and regulations affecting the safety and security of the food supply and to review the efficiency and effectiveness of the organizational structure of Federal food safety oversight. It requires the Academy to report its findings, conclusions, and recommendations, to Congress not later than 1 year after enactment of this Act and spells out the issues that must be addressed in the report. The Secretary must provide Congress and the President with a response to the recommendations.

Pursuant to amendment offered by Senator Akaka, for himself and Senator Levin, the legislation would extend whistleblower protections to airport security screeners. For baggage screeners who are federal employees, the legislation would extend the same whistleblower protections as apply generally to federal employees. They are protected against retaliation for coming forward with information about a violation of law, rule, or regulation; mismanagement; waste; abuse; or a danger to health or safety. For airport screening personnel who are not federal employees, the bill provides the same whistleblower protections as apply to air carrier personnel. They are protected against retaliation for coming forward with information about a violation relating to air carrier safety.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a section-by-section analysis and a letter dated August 28, 2002.

This section outlines the Secretary's broad responsibilities for developing policies, goals, objectives, priorities and plans for the promotion of homeland security, which include: developing a national strategy with the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism (established in Titles II and III), and advising the Director on the development of a comprehensive budget for programs under the strategy. The Secretary is also responsible for including State and local governments and other entities into the full range of homeland security activities; consulting with the Secretary of Defense and State governors regarding integration of the United States military, including the National Guard, into all aspects of the strategy and its implementation, including detection, prevention, protection, response and recovery, as well as training of personnel to respond to terrorist attacks involving chemical or biological agents; and developing an enterprise architecture for Department-wide information technology. In addition, the Secretary is responsible for administering the Homeland Security Advisory System and for annually reviewing and updating the Federal Response Plan for homeland security and emergency preparedness.

Sec. 102—subsection (c). Visa Issuance. Vests in the Secretary authority to issue regulations with respect to visas and other immigration and nationality laws implemented by consular officers. The Secretary is also authorized to assign employees of the Department to diplomatic and consular posts to advise consular officers regarding specific security threats relating to the adjudication of visa applications, review applications, and investigate matters under the jurisdiction of the Secretary. The Secretary of State may direct a consular officer to refuse a visa in the foreign policy or security interests of the United States.

Sec. 102—subsection (d). Amends the National Security Act to include the Secretary as a member of the National Security Council.

Sec. 103. Deputy Secretary. Establishes a Deputy Secretary for Homeland Security, appointed subject to Senate confirmation, responsible for assisting the Secretary in the administration and operations of the Department.

Sec. 105. Assistant Secretaries. Establishes not more than 5 Assistant Secretaries, appointed subject to Senate confirmation. When submitting the name of an individual to the Senate for confirmation, the President shall describe the general responsibilities that the appointee will exercise and, subject to that, the Secretary shall assign each Assistant Secretary such functions as the Secretary considers appropriate.

Sec. 106. Inspector General. Provides that there shall be an Inspector General (IG) in the Department subject to the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App), who, under the Inspector General Act, will be appointed subject to Senate confirmation. The Secretary may prohibit the IG from carrying out audits or performing other duties if the Secretary determines it necessary to prevent the disclosure of certain sensitive information, preserve national security, or prevent significant impairment to the national interest. The IG must notify Congress when the Secretary exercises these powers. The IG also shall have oversight over internal investigations performed by any other investigatory offices where they exist in the Department's subagencies. The Inspector General shall also designate one official to review information and receive complaints alleging abuses of civil rights and civil liberties by employees and officials of the Department; publicize information on the responsibilities and functions of the official; and submit semi-annual reports to Congress describing the implementation of this section. (The civil rights language parallels a USA Patriot Act provision requiring the designation of a similar official in the Justice Department's IG office.)

Sec. 107. Chief Financial Officer. Establishes a Chief Financial Officer (CFO), appointed subject to Senate confirmation.

Sec. 108. Chief Information Officer. Establishes a Chief Information Officer (CIO) to assist the Secretary with Department-wide information resources management.

Creates Office of International Affairs within the Office of the Secretary, headed by a Director, who shall be responsible for: promoting information and education exchange with foreign nations, including joint research and development on countermeasures, joint training exercises of first responders, and exchange of expertise on terrorism prevention, response and crisis management; planning international conferences, exchange programs and training activities; and managing international activities within the Department in consultation with the Department of State and other relevant Federal officials. The Director shall initially concentrate on fostering cooperation with countries that are already highly focused on homeland security issues and have been cooperative with the United States in the area of counterterrorism.

Sec. 114. Executive Schedule Positions. Establishes the Executive Schedule levels for the Secretary, Deputy Secretary, Under Secretaries, Assistant Secretaries, and other senior officers.

Subtitle B—Establishment of Directorates and Offices

Sec. 131. Directorate of Border and Transportation Protection. Establishes a Directorate of Border and Transportation Protection which shall be headed by an Under Secretary who is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Directorate shall be responsible for securing borders, territorial waters, ports, waterways, air, land, and sea transportation systems, including coordinating governmental activities at ports of entry. It shall also be responsible for using intelligence to establish inspection priorities for agricultural products and livestock from locations suspected of terrorist activities, harboring terrorists, or of having unusual human health or agriculture disease outbreaks. In addition, it shall provide agency-specific training for agents and analysts from within the Department, other agencies, State and local agencies and international entities that have partnerships with the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center. Authorities, functions, personnel, and assets are transferred from the Customs Service, which shall be maintained as a distinct entity; the Coast Guard, which shall also be maintained as a distinct entity and shall report directly to the Secretary; that portion of the Animal Plant and Health Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture which administers laws relating to agricultural quarantine inspections at points of entry; the Transportation Security Administration of the Department of Transportation; and the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center of the Department of Treasury (a center which provides training to law enforcement officers of 70 Federal partner agencies).

Sec. 131 subsection (d)—Exercise of Customs Revenue Functions. Notwithstanding the transfer of authorities, functions, personnel, and assets from the Customs Service, the Secretary of the Treasury shall retain authority to issue regulations governing customs revenue functions, with the concurrence of the Secretary and with the assistance of the Customs Service. The Customs Service is responsible for administering and enforcing the laws regarding customs revenue functions, which include: assessing, collecting and refunding duties, taxes and fees on imported goods; administering import quotas and labeling requirements; collecting import data needed to compile international trade statistics; and administering reciprocal trade agreements and trade preference legislation. These regulations will be administered by the Secretary. Within 60 days, the Secretary of the Treasury will submit recommendations to Congress regarding the appropriate allocation of legal authorities relating to these functions.

Sec. 131 subsection (e)—Preserving Coast Guard Mission Performance. Preserves the structural and operational integrity of the Coast Guard, the authority of the Commandant, the non-homeland security missions of the Coast Guard and the Coast Guard's capabilities to carry out these missions even as it is transferred to the new Department. The Coast Guard must be maintained intact and without reduction after transfer to the Department unless Congress legislates otherwise. No missions, functions, personnel or assets may be controlled by, or diverted to the principal and continuing use of any other part of the Department. The Secretary may not make a substantial change to the Coast Guard's non-security missions or capabilities without prior Congressional approval by statute. However, the President may waive this restriction for up to 90 days if he certifies to Congress that there is a clear, compelling and immediate state of national emergency. None of these conditions shall apply when the Coast Guard operates as a service in the Navy under section 3 of title 14, United States Code.

The Coast Guard will report directly to the Secretary. The Inspector General of the Department will conduct an annual review to assess the Coast Guard's performance, particularly with respect to non-security missions.

Sec. 132. Directorate of Intelligence. Establishes a Directorate of Intelligence, headed by an Under Secretary appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Directorate shall serve as a national-level focal point for the analysis of information available to the United States Government relating to the plans, intentions, and capabilities of terrorists and terrorist organizations for the purpose of supporting the mission of the Department. The Directorate shall communicate, coordinate, and cooperate with the intelligence community and other agencies as determined by the Secretary. The Director of Central Intelligence's Counterterrorist Center shall have primary responsibility for the analysis of foreign intelligence relating to international terrorism. The Directorate of Intelligence may conduct supplemental analysis of foreign intelligence relating to threats of terrorism against the United States.

In general, the Directorate shall be responsible for receiving and analyzing law enforcement information, intelligence and other information to detect and identify specific threats of terrorism; working with the Director of Central Intelligence and the intelligence community to establish overall intelligence priorities; requesting additional information; disseminating information to other entities, including state and local law enforcement, to assist in deterring, preventing and responding to terrorism and other threats; establishing, in conjunction with other appropriate officials, secure communications and information technology infrastructure, and advanced analytical tools; and ensuring that all material received by the Department is protected against unauthorized disclosure and handled consistent with the authority of the Director of Central Intelligence to protect sources and methods, and similar authorities of the Attorney General concerning sensitive law enforcement information. The Directorate is also responsible for providing training and other support to providers of information to the Department or consumers of information from the Department; and making recommendations to the Secretary for improving policies and procedures governing sharing of law enforcement, intelligence, and other information within the Federal government and between the Federal government and state and local governments and law enforcement agencies. The Directorate shall be staffed, in part, by analysts via reimbursable detail from agencies of the intelligence community.

Sec. 132 subsection (c)—Access to Information. Provides that, unless otherwise directed by the President, the Secretary shall have access to, and agencies shall provide, all reports, assessments, analytical information, and information, including unevaluated intelligence, relating to the plans, intentions, capabilities, and activities of terrorist organizations and to other areas of responsibility that may be collected, possessed, or prepared by any other United States government agency. As the President may further provide, the Secretary shall receive additional information requested by the Secretary. The Secretary may enter into cooperative agreements with agencies, and regardless of whether the Secretary has entered into any such cooperative agreement, all agencies shall promptly provide information to the Secretary.

Sec. 132 subsection (e)—Additional Responsibilities. The Under Secretary for Intelligence is also responsible for developing analyses concerning the means terrorists might employ to exploit vulnerabilities in homeland security infrastructure; developing and conducting experiments, tests and inspections to test weaknesses in homeland defenses; developing and practicing counter-surveillance techniques to prevent attacks; conducting risk assessments to determine the risk posed by specific kinds of terrorist attacks; and working with the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection, other agencies, State and local governments, the private sector and local law enforcement and intelligence agencies to address vulnerabilities.

Sec. 133. Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection. Establishes a Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection which shall be headed by an Under Secretary who is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Among other duties, the Directorate shall be responsible for: receiving relevant intelligence from the Directorate of Intelligence, law enforcement information and other information to comprehensively assess the vulnerabilities of key resources and critical infrastructures; identifying priorities and supporting protective measures by the Department and other entities; developing a comprehensive national plan for securing key resources and critical infrastructure (as part of the National Strategy described in Title III); establishing specialized research and analysis units to identify vulnerabilities and protective measures in key areas of critical infrastructure, as well as other systems or facilities whose destruction or disruption could cause substantial harm to health, safety, property, or the environment; enhancing and sharing of information regarding cyber-security and physical security, developing security standards, tracking vulnerabilities, proposing improved risk management policies, and delineating the roles of various governmental agencies in preventing, defending, and recovering from attacks; and working with the Department of State and other appropriate agencies to help establish cyber security policy, standards and enforcement mechanisms. The Directorate will also be responsible for establishing the necessary organizational structure to provide leadership and focus on both cyber-security and physical security, and ensuring the maintenance of a nucleus of cyber and physical security experts in the United States Government.

The authorities, functions, personnel and assets of the following offices are transferred to the Department: (1) the Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office of the Department of Commerce, (established by Presidential Decision Directive 63 in 1998 to coordinate federal initiatives on critical infrastructure); (2) The National Infrastructure Protection Center of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than the Computer Investigations and Operations Section); (3) the National Communications System of the Department of Defense (established by Executive Order in 1984 to assist the President and others in (a) the exercise of telecommunications functions and (b) coordinating the planning for and provision of national security and emergency preparedness communications); (4) the Computer Security Division of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) of the Department of Commerce (the NIST division that is tasked with improving information systems security); (5) The National Infrastructure Simulation and Analysis Center of the Department of Energy (established to serve as a source of national competence to address critical infrastructure protection and continuity through support for activities related to counterterrorism, threat assessment, and risk mitigation); (6) The Federal Computer Incident Response Center of the General Service Administration (a partnership of computer incident response, security, and law enforcement personnel to share information on and handle computer security incidents); (7) The Energy Security and Assurance Program of the Department of Energy (a national security program to help reduce America's energy supply vulnerability from severe disruptions due to natural or malevolent causes); and (8) The Federal Protective Service of the General Services Administration (GSA) (which oversees security at Federal property managed by GSA).

Sec. 134. Directorate of Emergency Preparedness and Response. Establishes a Directorate of Emergency Preparedness and Response which shall be headed by an Under Secretary appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Among other duties, the Directorate shall be responsible for carrying out Federal emergency preparedness and response activities; providing State and local authorities with equipment for detection, protection, and decontamination in an emergency involving weapons of mass destruction; overseeing Federal, State and local emergency preparedness training and exercise programs; developing and managing a single response system for national incidents; managing and updating a Federal disaster response plan; using the resources of both human and animal health communities in emergency planning and response activities; creating a National Crisis Action Center to coordinate Federal support for State and local governments and the private sector in a crisis; coordinating and integrating operational activities of the Department of Defense, the National Guard, and other Federal agencies into the Federal response plan; managing, in consultation with the Under Secretary of Science and Technology and the Centers for Disease Control, the Select Agent Registration Program; overseeing the Centers for Disease Control's management of the Strategic National Stockpile of drugs, biologics, and devices, which is transferred to the Department; and developing a comprehensive plan to address the interface of medical informatics and the medical response to terrorism.

The authorities, functions, personnel and assets of the following entities are transferred: the Federal Emergency Management Agency; the National Office of Domestic Preparedness of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice (created by the Attorney General in 1998 to coordinate and facilitate federal efforts to assist state and local emergency responders with training and materials necessary to respond to an event involving weapons of mass destruction); the Office of Domestic Preparedness of the Department of Justice (developed to assist in the training of state and local law enforcement agencies to respond to terrorist incidents); the Office of Emergency Preparedness within the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) (responsible for coordinating HHS efforts to plan and prepare for a national response to medical emergencies arising from the use of weapons of mass destruction); the Strategic National Stockpile of the Department of Health and Human Services; and the functions of the Select Agent Registration Program (HHS) and the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) (a program designed to identify all biological agents and toxins that have the potential to pose severe threats to public health and safety, regulate the transfer of such agents and toxins, and establish a registration scheme regulating their possession, use and transfer).

Sec. 135. Directorate of Science and Technology. Establishes a Directorate of Science and Technology which shall be headed by an Under Secretary appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Directorate will support the mission of the Department by (1) managing and supporting research and development activities to meet national homeland security needs and objectives; (2) articulating national research and development goals, priorities, and strategies pursuant to the mission of the Department; (3) coordinating with entities within and outside the Department to advance the research and development agenda of the Department; (4) advising the Secretary of the Department on all scientific and technical matters; and, (5) facilitating the transfer and deployment of technologies crucial to homeland security needs. To fulfill the mission of the Directorate, the Under Secretary will be responsible for, among other things, developing a technology roadmap biannually for achieving technological goals relevant to homeland security; instituting mechanisms to promote, facilitate, and expedite the transfer and deployment of technologies relevant to homeland security needs, including dual-use capabilities; establishing mechanisms for sharing research and technology developments and opportunities with appropriate Federal, State, local, and private sector entities; and, establishing in coordination with the appropriate Under Secretaries, a National Emergency Technology Guard (NET Guard) comprised of volunteers with expertise in science and technology to assist local communities in responding to and recovering from emergency contingencies.

This section authorizes the Secretary to exercise certain transactional and hiring authorities relating to research and development and the Secretary shall have the authority to transfer funds to agencies. Additionally, DHS will help direct the use of bioterrorism-related funds, appropriated to NIH, through joint strategic agreements between the Secretary of HHS and the Secretary of DHS. Under such agreements, the Secretary of DHS will have the authority to determine the broad, general research priorities, while the Secretary of HHS will have the authority to set the specific, scientific research agenda. NIH will continue to manage and award all funds. The Secretary is also able to contract with existing Federally Funded Research and Development Centers (FFRDCs), or establish such centers. This section also establishes an Acceleration Fund, to be administered by the Security Advanced Research Projects Agency (SARPA), to stimulate research and development projects; the Fund is authorized to receive an appropriation of $200,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 and such sums as are necessary in subsequent fiscal years. Through a joint agreement with the Coast Guard, ten percent of the Acceleration Fund is to be allocated to Coast Guard homeland security missions for FY'04 and FY'05.

The Directorate also establishes several mechanisms to promote research and development activities. These include: (1) a Science and Technology Council composed of senior research and development officials to, among other things, provide the Under Secretary with recommendations on priorities and strategies, and facilitate coordination among agencies, the private sector, and academia; (2) the Security Advanced Research Projects Agency (SARPA) to undertake and stimulate basic and applied research, leverage existing research and development, and accelerate the transition and deployment of technologies; (3) an Office of Risk Analysis and Assessment to, among other duties, conduct and commission studies of threat assessment and risk analysis to help guide the research priorities of the Department; (4) an Office of Technology Evaluation and Transition to serve as the principal clearinghouse for receiving and evaluating proposals for innovative technologies; (5) an Office for National Laboratories, which shall enter, on behalf of the Department, into joint sponsorship agreements with the Department of Energy (DOE) to coordinate and utilize the resources and expertise of DOE national laboratories and sites; and, (6) an Office of Laboratory Research, which shall incorporate personnel, functions, and assets from several programs and activities transferred from DOE that are related to chemical and biological security, nuclear smuggling, and nuclear assessment, as well as the National Bio-Weapons Defense Analysis Center which is transferred from the Department of Defense. The Office shall also administer the disbursement and undertake oversight of research and development funds transferred to HHS and other agencies outside the Department, and shall have a Science Advisor for bioterrorism. This section also requires the Secretary to develop a comprehensive long-term strategy and plan for engaging for-profit and other non-Federal entities in research, development, and production of homeland security countermeasures for biological, chemical, and radiological weapons.

Sec. 136. Directorate of Immigration Affairs. Establishes a Directorate of Immigration Affairs to carry out all functions of that Directorate in accordance with Division B of the Act.

Sec. 137. Office for State and Local Government Coordination. Establishes within the Office of the Secretary an office to oversee and coordinate programs for and relationships with State and local governments; assess, and advocate for, the resources needed by State and local governments to implement the National Strategy for combating terrorism; provide State and local governments with regular information, research and technical support; and develop a process for receiving meaningful input from State and local governments to assist in the development of the National Strategy and other homeland security activities. The Secretary shall appoint a Chief Homeland Security Liaison Officer, who shall coordinate the activities of homeland security liaison officers in each state. Sec. 164. Whistleblower Protection for Federal Employees Who are Airport Security Screeners. Extends to federal employees who are baggage screeners for the Transportation Security Agency the same whistleblower protections as apply generally to federal employees. They are protected against retaliation for coming forward with information about a violation, mismanagement, waste, abuse, or a danger to health or safety.

Sec. 182. Transfer of Agencies. Provides that the transfer of an agency to the Department shall occur when the President directs, but in no event later than the end of the transition period.

Sec. 183. Transitional Authorities. Provides that until an agency is transferred, existing officials shall provide the Secretary such assistance as he may request in preparing for the integration of the agency into the Department and may detail personnel to assist with the transition on a reimbursable basis. During the transition period the President may designate any officer who has been confirmed by the Senate, and who continues as such an officer, to act until the office is filled, subject to the time limits in the Vacancies Act. A Senate-confirmed officer of an agency transferred to the Department may be appointed to a Departmental office with equivalent authorities and responsibilities without being again confirmed by the Senate for the new position.

Sec. 184. Incidental Transfers and Transfer of Related Functions. The Director of OMB, in consultation with the Secretary, may make additional incidental transfers of personnel and assets. Also, at any time an agency is transferred to the Department, the President may transfer any agency established to carry out or support adjudicatory or review functions in relation to the transferred agency. However, the President would not be authorized to transfer the Executive Office of Immigration Review in the Justice Department under this section. The transfer of an agency that is part of a department will include the transfer of related secretarial functions to the new Secretary of Homeland Security.

Sec. 185. Implementation Progress Reports and Legislative Recommendations. Provides that the Secretary shall prepare and submit to Congress a series of Implementation Progress Reports. The initial report is due not later than 6 months after the date of enactment. Additional reports are due every six months until the final report which will be due not later than 6 months after the transfer is completed.

Sec. 185 subsection (c)—Contents. This subsection specifies the information to be provided. Reports will describe the steps needed to transfer and incorporate agencies into the Department, a timetable, and a progress report on meeting the schedule. Reports will also include information workforce planning, information technology matters, and other matters necessary for the successful implementation of the transition.

Sec. 185 subsection (d)—Legislative Recommendations. Calls upon the Secretary to submit recommendations for legislation that the Secretary determines necessary as part of each semi-annual implementation progress report. If the legislative recommendations are ready sooner, the bill specifically invites the Secretary to submit them in advance of the balance of the report. The Secretary is to provide recommended legislation that would, among other things, facilitate the integration of transferred entities into the Department; reorganize within the Department, or provide the Secretary additional authority to do so; address inequities in pay or other terms and conditions of employment; enable the Secretary to engage in essential procurement; and otherwise help further the mission of the Department.

Sec. 186. Transfer and Allocation. Provides that, except where otherwise provided in this title, personnel employed in connection with, and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property records, and any unexpended balance on appropriations, authorizations, allocations and other funds related to the functions and entities transferred, shall be transferred to the Secretary as appropriate, subject to the approval of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and subject to applicable laws on the transfer of appropriated funds. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this section shall be used only for purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

Sec. 187. Savings Provisions. In general, this section provides that all orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, agreements, contracts, recognitions of labor organizations, collective bargaining agreements and other administrative actions in effect at the time this Division takes effect shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified or revoked. Certain proceedings, such as notices of proposed rulemaking or applications for licenses, permits, or financial assistance pending at the time this title takes effect shall also continue. Suits and other proceedings commenced before the effective date of this Act are also not affected. Administrative actions by an agency relating to a function transferred under this title may be continued by the Department.

Sec. 187 subsection (f)(1). Employee Rights. This subsection is intended to assure employees in agencies transferred to the new Department that they can keep their collective bargaining rights unless their job changes and there is an actual national security basis for taking those rights away. For agencies transferred to the Department subject to pre-existing rights to form a union, the President may not terminate those rights agency-wide by executive order. However, such rights may be withdrawn from individual employees at the Department if their primary job duties materially change and consist of intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative duties directly related to terrorism investigation and if it is demonstrated that collective bargaining would adversely affect national security. Applying this standard under existing procedures, managers at the Department may act immediately to remove individual employees from collective bargaining upon deciding that the conditions for removal are met. Either the union or management may ask the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA) to review this action. For new offices established at the Department under this bill, the President may remove collective bargaining rights from an entire office by executive order, if the primary function is intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative duties related to terrorism investigation, and if application of those rights would adversely affect national security. Furthermore, employees hired to serve in new offices at the Department, like employees transferred to the Department, may be removed individually from collective bargaining for national security reasons.

Sec. 187 subsections (f)(2)–(4). Other personnel matters. The transfer of an employee to the Department will not alter the terms and conditions of employment, including compensation. Any conditions for appointment, including the requirement of Senate confirmation, would continue to apply. Any employee transferred with pre-existing whistleblower protection rights may not be deprived of those rights based on a determination of necessity for good administration.

Sec. 187 subsection (g). No effect on intelligence authorities. The transfer of authorities under this title shall not be construed as affecting the authorities of the Director of Central Intelligence, the Secretary of Defense, or the heads of departments and agencies within the intelligence community.

Sec. 188. Transition Plan. By September 15, 2002, the President is required to submit to Congress a transition plan, including a detailed plan for transition to the Department and implementation of relevant portions of the Act, and including a proposal for financing the new operations of the Department for which appropriations are not available.

Sec. 189. Use of Appropriated Funds. This section sets forth a number of conditions on the use of funds by the Department, the Office, and the National Combating Terrorism Strategy Panel. Balances of appropriations and other funds transferred under the Act may be used only for the purposes for which they were originally available and subject to the conditions provided by the law originally appropriating or otherwise making available the amount. The President shall notify Congress not less than 15 days before transferring funds or assets under this Act. Additional conditions under this section apply to disposal of property, receipt and use of gifts, and other matters. The President shall submit a detailed budget request for the Department for FY 2004.

Subtitle F—Administrative Provisions

Sec. 191. Reorganizations and Delegations. Provides that the Secretary may, as appropriate, reorganize within the Department, except where specific organizational structure is established by law. The Secretary may delegate any of the functions of the Secretary and authorize successive redelegations to other officers or employees of the Department. However, any function vested by law, or assigned by this title, to an organizational unit of the Department or to the head of an organizational unit may not be delegated outside of that unit.

Sec. 192. Reporting Requirements. Requires the Comptroller General of the United States to submit to Congress a report not later than 15 months after the effective date of this division and each year for the succeeding five years containing an evaluation of the progress reports submitted under section 185 and the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Comptroller General concerning how successfully the Department is meeting the homeland security missions of the Department and the other missions of the Department.

This section also outlines additional reports to be submitted by the Secretary. These include: (1) biennial reports relating to (a) border security and emergency preparedness, and (b) certifying preparedness to prevent, protect against, and respond to natural disasters, cyber attacks, and incidents involving weapons of mass destruction; (2) a report outlining proposed steps to consolidate management authority for Federal operations at key points of entry into the United States; (3) a report with definitions of the terms “combating terrorism” and “homeland security,” and (4) a strategic plan and annual performance plan, along with annual performance reports, required by existing statutes.

Sec. 193. Environmental Protection, Safety, and Health Requirements. Provides that the Secretary shall ensure that the Department complies with all applicable environmental, safety and health statutes and requirements, and develops procedures for meeting such requirements.

Sec. 194. Labor Standards. All laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors in the performance of construction work financed in whole or in part with assistance received under this Act shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act (40 U.S.C. 276a et. seq.).

Sec. 195. Procurement of Temporary and Intermittent Services. In addition to the authority to hire experts or consultants on a temporary or intermittent basis in accordance with section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, the Secretary may procure personal services, whenever necessary due to an urgent homeland security need, for periods of not more than a year without regard to the pay limitations of section 3109.

Sec. 196. Preserving Non-Homeland Security Mission Performance. Establishes a reporting requirement designed to monitor the performance of non-homeland security missions by entities transferred to the Department. For each of the first five years after a program or agency is transferred to the Department, the relevant Under Secretary must report to the Secretary, the Comptroller General and Congress regarding the performance of that entity, with particular emphasis on non-homeland security missions. These reports shall seek to inventory non-homeland security capabilities, including the personnel, budgets and flexibilities used to carry out those functions. The reports shall include information regarding whether any changes are required to enable the transferred entities to continue to carry out non-homeland security missions without diminishment.

Sec. 197. Future Years Homeland Security Program. Beginning with the FY 2005 budget request, each budget request shall be accompanied by a Future Years Homeland Security Program, reflecting the estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations included in that budget covering the fiscal year with respect to which the budget is submitted and at least the four succeeding fiscal years.

Sec. 198. Protection of Voluntarily Furnished Confidential Information. Records pertaining to the vulnerability of, and threats to, critical infrastructure that are voluntarily furnished to the Department and that are not customarily made public by the provider are not subject to public disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. This provision would not cover records submitted to satisfy legal requirements or to obtain permits or other approvals, and would not cover information that another Federal, State or local agency receives independently of the Department.

Sec. 199. Authorization of Appropriations. Authorizes such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to administer and manage the Department and to carry out the Department's functions created by the Act.

Title II—National Office for Combating Terrorism

Sec. 201. National Office for Combating Terrorism. The President, in consultation with the Director, shall assign resources as appropriate to the Office. The establishment of the Office within the Executive Office of the President shall not be construed as affecting access by Congress to information or personnel of the Office.

Sec. 202. Funding for Strategy Programs and Activities. This section establishes a process for the Director to review the proposed budgets for federal programs under the Strategy. The Director will, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Secretary of Homeland Security, identify programs that contribute to the Strategy, and provide advice to the heads of the executive departments and agencies on the amount and use of these programs through budget certification procedures and the development of a consolidated budget for the Strategy. The Director will review agencies' budget submissions to OMB and may decertify any proposals that do not incorporate the proposed funding or initiatives previously advised by the National Office on Combating Terrorism. The Director will provide Congress with notice of any such decertification. Each year, the Director will, in consultation with the Secretary of Homeland Security and the head of each Federal terrorism prevention and response agency, develop a consolidated proposed budget for all programs and activities under the Strategy for that fiscal year.

Title III—National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and the Homeland Security Response

This section also establishes the National Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response Council to assist with preparation and implementation of the Strategy. Members of the Council will be the heads of federal terrorism prevention and response agencies or their designees. The Secretary and Director will co-chair the Council, which will meet at their direction.

Sec. 302. Management Guidance for Strategy Implementation. This section directs the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Secretary and the Director, to provide management guidance for Federal agencies to successfully implement the Strategy, and to report to Congress on these efforts. It also requires the General Accounting Office to evaluate the management guidance and agency performance in implementing the Strategy.

Sec. 303. National Combating Terrorism Strategy Panel. This section establishes a nonpartisan, independent panel to conduct an assessment of the Strategy as well as an independent, alternative assessment of measures required to combat terrorism, including homeland security measures. The panel will prepare a preliminary report no later than July 1, 2004, with a final report by December 1, 2004 and every four years thereafter.

Title IV—Law Enforcement Powers of Inspector General Agents

Sec. 401. Law Enforcement Powers of Inspector General Agents. This section amends the Inspector General Act to authorize certain IG officers to carry a firearm or make an arrest in certain instances while engaged in official duties as authorized by this Act or other statute, or by the Attorney General; and to seek and execute warrants under the authority of the United States upon probable cause that a violation has been committed. This section also describes the conditions under which the Attorney General may authorize exercise of powers under this section, and it lists those offices of Inspector General which are exempt from this requirement. This section further describes the circumstances under which the Attorney General may also rescind or suspend powers authorized for an Office of Inspector General, and provides that determinations by the Attorney General in this section shall not be reviewable in or by any court. The section also requires the Offices of Inspector General to enter into memoranda of understanding to establish an external review process for ensuring that adequate safeguards and management procedures continue to exist within each Office.

Title V—Federal Emergency Procurement Flexibility

Subtitle A—Temporary Flexibility for Certain Procurements

Sec. 501. Defines the term "executive agency."

Sec. 502. Procurements for Defense Against or Recovery from Terrorism or Nuclear, Biological, Chemical, or Radiological Attack. States that the authorities provided in this subtitle apply to any procurement of property or services by or for an executive agency that, as determined by the head of the executive agency, are to be used to facilitate defense against or recovery from terrorism or nuclear, biological, chemical or radiological attack for one year after the date of enactment.

Sec. 503. Increased Simplified Acquisition Threshold for Procurements in Support of Humanitarian or Peacekeeping Operations or Contingency Operations. Raises the threshold amounts to $250,000 for contracts carried out in the United States and to $500,000 for contracts outside the United States pursuant to section 502. Raises the Small Business reserve to $250,000 for contracts inside the United States and $500,000 for contracts outside the United States for procurements carried out pursuant to section 502.

Sec. 506. Use of Streamlined Procedures. Lists streamlined acquisition procedures which may be used. The head of an executive agency shall use, when appropriate, streamlined acquisition authorities and procedures provided by law including use of procedures other than competitive procedures and task and delivery order contracts. This provision removes the thresholds ($5 million for manufacturing and $3 million for all other contracts) for contracts with limited competition under the small business "8(A)" and HUB Zone programs. Waiving the threshold means that small disadvantaged businesses within the "8(A)" program and qualified HUB Zone small business concerns can compete for contracts using limited competition (or sole source competition) regardless of the value of the contract.

Sec. 507. Review and Report by Comptroller General. Requires that not later than March 31, 2004, the Comptroller General complete a review of the extent to which procurements of property and services have been made in accordance with this subtitle, and submit a report on the results of the review to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee and House Government Reform Committee. The report shall assess the extent to which property and services procured in accordance with this subtitle have contributed to the capacity of Federal employees to carry out the missions of the agencies, and the extent to which Federal employees have been trained on the use of technology. The report shall include any recommendations of the Comptroller General resulting from the assessment. The Comptroller General shall consult with the Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Committee on Governmental Reform on the specific issues and topics to be reviewed, including areas such as technology integration, employee training, and human capital management, and the data requirements of the study.

AUGUST 28, 2002.

Hon. JOSEPH I. LIEBERMAN,
Hon. FRED THOMPSON,
Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN LIEBERMAN AND RANKING MEMBER THOMPSON: We commend your leadership and dedication to the creation of a new Department of Homeland Security. We thank you for the opportunity to contribute to this historic legislation.

As division B of your legislation currently includes immigration provisions drawn in large part from legislation that we introduced earlier this year—S. 2444, the Immigration Reform, Accountability, and Security Enhancement Act of 2002, we here provide you with an explanation of the intent behind this language.

Purpose and Summary. For years, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) has been plagued by myriad problems, including mission-overload, mismanagement, and insufficient resources. For too long, INS has been unable to meet its dual responsibility of enforcing our immigration and nationality laws and providing services to newcomers, refugees, and aspiring citizens.

A critical component of homeland security is an agency that effectively polices our borders, enforces our laws, and provides timely immigration services. To responsibly create an Office of Homeland Security, we must address the inadequacies of the INS.

Accordingly, Division B abolishes the INS and replaces it with a Directorate of Immigration Affairs (Directorate) placed squarely within the Department of Homeland Security.

Legislative History. The Judiciary Committee has earnestly debated how best to reform the INS. Since 1998, the Judiciary Committee has held five hearings on this topic, and Senate bills to reform INS have been introduced in each of the last three Congresses. In each hearing, governmental and private sector experts critiqued the workings of INS and offered substantive, insightful recommendations on how to revamp that agency. From those hearings, certain principles have emerged: the need for a separation of functions, the need for greater coordination between functions, and the need for a strong, central authority to ensure consistent policy and implementation.

In the 106th Congress, Senator Abraham and Senator Kennedy, chair and ranking member of the Immigration Subcommittee, introduced S. 1563, the "INS Reform and Border Security Act of 1999," a bipartisan attempt to split enforcement and services into separate bureaus and to elevate the profile of the immigration agency within the Department of Justice. This legislation served as the basis for legislation in the 107th Congress: S. 2444, the "Immigration Reform, Accountability, and Security Enhancement Act of 2002," another bipartisan bill, introduced by Senator Kennedy and Senator Brownback, chair and ranking member of the current immigration subcommittee. S. 2444, like its predecessor, splits enforcement and services into separate bureaus and seeks to elevate the profile of immigration in the Department of Justice. Cosponsors of S. 2444 include Senators Hatch, Feinstein, DeWine, Durbin, Helms, Edwards, Hagel, Daschle, Dodd, Graham, and Clinton.

Need for INS Reform. Experts both inside and outside government have reached the same conclusions regarding the most critical problems with the INS. In a report from the early 1990s, the General Accounting Office observed that the INS' problems stem from a lack of clearly defined goals and priorities, inconsistent leadership and weak management systems, and overlapping and inconsistent programs. In the years since, these observations have been echoed in witness testimony, academic publications, and reports issued by various commissions. The criticisms of INS have remained consistent over the past decade.

With the criticisms have come various recommendations on how to rehabilitate the agency. Three guiding principles can be distilled from those recommendations:

Separation of functions. Immigration law and policy can roughly be divided into two components—enforcement and services. Currently, the enforcement and service functions are commingled in a way that creates conflicting priorities and troubling inefficiencies. There must be a clearer separation of the enforcement and services functions to achieve great clarity of mission and thereby greater efficiency in the respective functions.

Coordination. At the same time, the two functions cannot exist independent of each other. Almost every immigration-related action involves both an adjudicatory and enforcement component. Law enforcers must be cognizant of immigration benefits and relief; adjudicators must be mindful of immigration fraud and transgressions. Accordingly, effective coordination between the two functions must exist for either function to work well.

Strong, Central Authority. Given the dynamic of having separate but coordinated functions, it is essential to establish a strong, central authority to ensure uniform immigration policy, efficient interaction between components, and fiscal responsibility. There must be a focal point for managerial accountability for all immigration-related actions, as well as a central decision-maker to guarantee that all aspects of immigration policy and implementation get appropriate attention.

Division B satisfies all three of these principles. First, it abolishes INS and creates a Directorate of Immigration Affairs (Directorate) within the new Department of Homeland Security. The Directorate consists of three offices: the Office of the Under Secretary of Immigration Affairs, the Bureau of Enforcement and Border Affairs, and the Bureau of Services.

Under Secretary of Immigration Affairs. The Directorate is headed by an Under Secretary of Immigration Affairs (Under Secretary). Under the authority of the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Under Secretary is responsible for administering the Directorate, including the direction, supervision, and coordination of both bureaus.

The Under Secretary develops and implements U.S. immigration policy and ensures that immigration policy is coordinated and applied consistently through: (1) administration and enforcement of U.S. immigration laws; (2) administration of the Directorate; (3) inspection of individuals arriving at ports of entry; (4) management of resources, personnel, and other support; and (5) management of information resources, including maintenance and coordination of records, databases and other information within the Directorate.

Reporting to the Under Secretary is a General Counsel who serves as chief legal officer for the Directorate. A Chief Financial Officer is responsible for directing, supervising, and coordinating the Directorate's budget. Also in the Office of the Under Secretary is a Chief of Policy and Strategy, and a Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs.

Bureau of Immigration Services. The Bureau of Immigration Services, headed by its Assistant Secretary, administers the service functions of the Directorate, including: (1) visa petitions; (2) applications for adjustment of status and change of status; (3) naturalization applications; (4) asylum and refugee applications; (5) determinations regarding the custody and parole of asylum seekers; and (6) Service Center adjudications.

Bureau of Enforcement and Border Affairs. The Bureau of Enforcement and Border Affairs, headed by its Assistant Secretary, administers the immigration enforcement functions of the Directorate, including: (1) border patrol; (2) detention; (3) removal; (4) intelligence; and (5) investigations.

Offices Within Each Bureau. Each bureau has its own Chief Budget Officer (under the direction of the Directorate's Chief Financial Officer). Each bureau also has an Office of Quality Assurance (which develops procedures and conducts audits to ensure that the Director's policies are properly implemented) and an Office of Professional Responsibility (which ensures professional conduct by bureau personnel).

Office of the Ombudsman. Reporting to the Under Secretary, is the Office of the Ombudsman, which assists the public in resolving individual cases, identifying systemic problems encountered by the public, and proposing solutions to those problems. The Office of the Ombudsman will report to Congress annually.

Office of Immigration Statistics. The Directorate also contains an Office of Immigration Statistics, which is responsible for collecting and analyzing statistical information for both the Directorate and the immigration court system.

Raised Profile of Immigration. After September 11th, it is clear that strengthening our immigration system is an indispensable part of the nation's efforts to prevent future terrorist attacks. Remedying INS' administrative woes is critical, but will do little to improve our security if the agency that administers our immigration laws and policies is not given the priority and attention it deserves.

Immigration law and policy is extremely complex and dynamic. Immigration officers are charged with a wide variety of duties. INS guards the borders, admitting more than 500 million citizens, permanent residents, and lawful visitors, students, and temporary workers each year. INS also adjudicates hundreds of thousands of applications for citizenship, permanent residence, changes of status, and work authorization annually. Further, INS is responsible for apprehending unlawful entrants, investigating fraud, enforcing employment sanctions, and removing criminal aliens. At the same time, INS entertains family-based and employment-based visa petitions, while also hearing asylum in the United States and refugee claims around the world.

Given the array of responsibilities and the sheer volume of people involved, immigration functions merit special attention. The immigration functions must not be diluted in with a host of other border functions. They deserve a separate directorate wherein the various missions of INS, which standing alone are diverse enough, can be properly attended. Elevation of the INS within its own directorate also achieves the necessary balance between enhancing our security, securing our borders, and ensuring the effective, efficient, and fair implementation of our immigration laws.

Need to Keep Enforcement and Services Together. Almost every immigration-related action involves both enforcement and service components. Coordination of these key functions is critical to ensure consistent interpretation and implementation of the law, clarity of mission, and in turn, more efficient adjudications and more effective enforcement. Coordination of immigration functions cannot be achieved merely by creating a shared database or some commonality of management far up the administrative ladder. Moreover, coordination is certainly impossible when enforcement and services are housed in different departments. Inconsistent policies and interpretations of the law, the lack of a common culture, and—most importantly—the absence of a single, integrated authority who can resolve differences result in a disjointed immigration policy and undermines the efficacy of both enforcement and services.

September 11th brought to light serious problems with immigration enforcement, but there are equally serious problems with immigration services. If services are divorced from enforcement, particularly in a department dedicated to security, services will continue to struggle and will inevitably, and understandably, be devalued and assigned lesser priority. To ensure that services are not 'left behind' in a security culture, it is essential that they be recognized as the other half of the immigration equation.

Coordination with Other Border Functions. Coordinating the border security functions within the Department of Homeland Security is critical, whatever the agency's configuration. That coordination is achieved by creating a Border Coordination Working Group, composed of the Secretary, the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security, and the Under Secretary for Immigration Affairs. The Working Group is responsible for coordinating functions necessary to secure the borders, territorial waters, ports, terminal, waterways, and air, land, and sea transportation systems of the United States.

The responsibilities of this office include:

Coordinating budget requests and allocation of appropriations, staffing requirements, communication, use of equipment, transportation, facilities and other infrastructure;

Developing and implementing policies and technologies to ensure the speedy, orderly, and efficient flow of lawful traffic, travel, and commerce and enhanced scrutiny for high risk travelers and cargo;

Monitoring, evaluating, and making improvements in the coverage and geographic distribution of border security programs and personnel;

Coordinating joint and cross-training programs for personnel performing border security functions; and

Identifying systemic problems in coordination encountered by border security agencies and programs and proposing administrative, regulatory, or statutory changes to mitigate such problems.

The Working Group also consults with representatives of other agencies or departments to enhance coordination and cooperation, curtail overlapping and duplicative functions, and reduce interagency rivalries. At the same time, experts in each of these agencies retain their authority and ability to perform their jobs at this critical time.

Treatment of Unaccompanied Minors. Unaccompanied minors deserve special treatment under our immigration laws and policies. Many of these children have been abandoned, are fleeing persecution, or are escaping abusive situations at home. These children are either sent here by adults or forced by their circumstances, and the decision to come to our country is seldom their own.

Currently, INS has responsibility for the care and custody of these children. It would not be appropriate to transfer this responsibility to a Department of Homeland Security.

Office of Refugee Resettlement. This legislation transfers responsibility for the care and custody of unaccompanied alien children who are in Federal custody (by reason of their immigration status) from INS to the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) in the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). ORR has decades of experience working with foreign-born children, and ORR administers a specialized resettlement program for unaccompanied refugee children.

HHS coordinates comprehensive services to address the special needs of newcomer children, including placement in foster or group home settings, medical and mental health care, skills training, education, family tracing, and legal assistance. Such services are tailored to address the cultural, linguistic, legal, and developmental needs of newcomer children and the individual needs of the child. ORR can easily integrate the care of unaccompanied alien children into its existing functions.

Responsibilities. Minimum standards for the care and custody are set forth in the legislation, as are ensuring that unaccompanied children are housed in appropriate shelters or with foster families who are able to care for them.

Specifically, ORR will be responsible for: (1) ensuring that the best interests of the child are considered in the care and placement of unaccompanied alien children; (2) making placement, release, and detention determinations; (3) implementing determinations; (4) convening the Interagency Task Force on Unaccompanied Alien Children; (5) identifying qualified persons, entities, and facilities to house unaccompanied alien children; (6) overseeing persons, entities and facilities; (7) compiling and publishing a State-by-State list of professionals or other entities qualified to contract with the Office to provide services; (8) maintaining statistical information and other data on unaccompanied alien children in the Office's custody and care; (9) collecting and compiling statistical information from the INS (or successor entity); and (10) conducting investigations and inspections of facilities and other entities where unaccompanied alien children reside. The legislation also provides children with access to appointed counsel and guardians ad litem.

Responsibility for adjudicating immigration benefits will not transfer over to HHS but will remain with the INS (or its successor) and the immigration court system.

Immigration Court System. The current immigration court system—the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), which contains the immigration courts and the Board of Immigration Appeals—is a component of the Department of Justice. The immigration court system exists not in statute, but only in regulation.

The evolution of the immigration courts reflects the importance of impartiality. Originally, the court system was entirely contained within the INS. In response to criticisms that judge and "prosecutor" should not be housed together, the immigration courts were moved to a separate component within the Justice Department—the EOIR—in 1983. Even parsed out into separate components, however, concerns remain that the immigration courts are still too closely aligned with the immigration enforcers.

Concerns about the impartiality of a court system located in a law enforcement agency are certain to be exacerbated if the court system is relocated to a security agency. If INS moves, then it is best to leave the immigration court system where it is—in the Justice Department—and thereby keep judge and enforcer well separated.

The immigration court system is critical both to law enforcement and to humanitarian protections. The immigration courts daily make decisions that could remove a criminal alien from our country, provide safe haven to an asylum-seeker fleeing torture or execution, and keep together or break up families. The immigration courts make potentially life-or-death decisions every day and are therefore too important to exist only in regulation.

We look forward to working with you on this legislation and making additional recommendations as it is considered by the full Senate.

Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY,

on Immigration,
Committee on the Judiciary.*

Ranking Member, Subcommittee on Immigration, Committee on the Judiciary.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess from 2:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. today for a briefing by Secretary Rumsfeld.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Connecticut for the statement he has made today and for his leadership, once again, on this issue, and for his contribution toward our being here today. He speaks eloquently as to our need to do things differently with regard to this Government and with regard to the reorganization of a very important part of our Government. His analogy of gasoline and engines I think is right on point. It doesn't matter how much gasoline you put into a faulty engine, it is still a faulty engine.

We need to do better than that. There is no reason that at end of the day we can't pass a bill that is going to make this country safer than it was before, and that is our common goal.

Few need to be reminded why we are here. While September 11 was not the opening salvo, it was the event that forced us to confront the scope of the threats to our country and to recognize the need to do something significant and meaningful to address those threats.

Prior to the 1980s, most terrorist groups were regionally focused and lacked the means and the connections to operate on a global scale. They relied upon state sponsors for financial support and often fought for ideological reasons. The few exceptions were those who fought to destroy the Israeli state. During the 1980s, this trend began to change. With the increase in militant Islamic attacks against Israel, the rise of revolutionary Iran, and the formation of Mujahedin in Afghanistan, terrorism began to take a more extremist tone. Then, in 1983, a small group in Lebanon, now known as Hizballah, began using a devastating new tactic to target Western troops: suicide bombings. The United States was the first to experience the destructiveness of this form of attack. In April 1983, a suicide bomber drove a 2,000 pound truck bomb into the U.S. embassy in Beirut, killing 63. The full impact of suicide bombings, however, was not felt until 6 months later. On October 23, 1983, a lone suicide bomber drove a truck laden with explosives into the U.S. Marine Corps barracks in Beirut, killing 241 American servicemen and injuring dozens more.

Since 1983, we have experienced other terrorist attacks as well. In 1989, terrorists downed Pam Am 103, killing over two hundred; in 1993, extremists tried to destroy the World Trade Center by detonating a van laden with tens of pounds of high explosives; in 1995, Timothy McVeigh exploded a rental van outside the Oklahoma Federal Building, killing 168 people; in 1996, religious extremists blew up the Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia, killing 19 American servicemen and injuring another 372; in 1998, extremists blew up truck bombs outside the U.S. embassies in Tanzania and Kenya, murdering 252 people, including 12 Americans, and injuring at least 5,000 more; and in 2000, extremists blew themselves up alongside the U.S.S. Cole, nearly sinking the ship. 17 American sailors were killed and another 39 were wounded.

The list does not include a number of planned terrorist attacks that were disrupted or prevented by U.S. or foreign intelligence, military, and law enforcement operations. It is easy to imagine, however, that this list could have been much longer.

Over the last 10 years, Congress literally held dozens of hearings on what we should do to combat terrorism. We have also had report after report highlighting the dangers of terrorism. The General Accounting Office alone has issued over 50 reports on various ways to better protect our country against terrorist attack. Several independent commissions have also recommended measures that would have addressed many of our vulnerabilities. Unfortunately, we did not implement measures because they were either costly or unpopular. We lacked both consensus and a sense of urgency.

If anything positive can be gleaned from the tragic attacks of September 11, perhaps it is the appearance of a national consensus for change. Most Americans today believe that the deficiencies in our homeland security must be corrected and are willing to bear the costs of doing so.

President Bush has personally embraced this task and employed every tool at his disposal. Some of the actions that he has taken to date include: Destroying terrorist camps in Afghanistan and helping to restore a civil government in that beleaguered land; tracking and eliminating funding sources for terrorist organizations; deploying greater intelligence resources around the world to hunt down terrorists; fostering an international consensus and forming a diplomatic coalition against terrorism and its supporters; creating the Northern Command in the Department of Defense to manage and coordinate the defense of the territory of the United States; and, doubling the "Homeland Security" budget to $38 billion; and developing a National Homeland Security Strategy.

A critical element of the Administration's response to terrorism is the President's proposal to create a Department of Homeland Security. This proposal is not a new idea. Seven months before September 11, the Hart-Rudman Commission released its third comprehensive report on U.S. national security. To the surprise of many, the commission proposed the creation of a new federal department to better counter the threat posed by terrorism. Unfortunately, most considered such an idea at that time to be impractical. Even after September 11, many of us were less than enthusiastic about the creation of such a department. To their credit, Senators Hart and Rudman continued to push for a department. Our colleagues, Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator SPECTER, eventually took up their cause and offered legislation that would create a Department of Homeland Security.

Over the last eleven months, the President's Office of Homeland Security has carefully examined every facet of our homeland security weaknesses, our needs, our effort, our allocation of resources. It considered numerous proposals for a homeland security organization from outside studies, commission, and members of Congress, including the Hart-Rudman proposal. The President eventually came to the conclusion that reorganization on a large scale was necessary. The President's proposal would not have been possible had the Administration not taken the time to conduct its comprehensive review.

The President's June 6 proposal was unusual in several respects. Reorganization of the executive branch on this scale has not occurred or been attempted for 55 years. The proposal would move 22 federal agencies and programs with some 170,000 employees into a single department with a total budget for fiscal year 2003 of nearly $38 billion.

Upon receiving the President's proposal, the governmental Affairs Committee held a number of hearings and subsequently marked up a substitute amendment to S. 2452, the bill we are moving to consider. While there is broad overlap between the President's proposal and the committee's substitute amendment, there are significant differences as well. The debate will mostly focus on the differences. Before I highlight some of these areas, let me also take some time to summarize the Committee's substitute and explain the importance of some of its provisions.

As it currently stands, our country's homeland security effort is disorganized and disjointed. Many Federal agencies responsible for homeland security have many other responsibilities as well. The guiding principle of the proposals to reorganize Federal agencies into a new department of Homeland Security is the recognition that the Nation needs a reinvigorated and refocused effort on the part of these agencies. A new department will force agencies whose missions only partly involve homeland security to refocus their efforts to make homeland security their primary effort.

Both the President's proposal and the committee's substitute amendment to the Lieberman-Specter bill would enhance border security by bringing in under one roof all the agencies responsible for border control. The Border Patrol, the Customs Service, the new Transportation Security Administration, the appropriate components of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, and the coast guard will all become a part of the new department, with an eye towards developing a fully integrated approach to border security operations.

On border security, I do want to point out my concern that the committee substitute keeps the components of the Immigration and Naturalization Service intact in a new Immigration Affairs Directorate of the new department. I think the Border Patrol must not only become part of the new department, but must be made a part of the Border and Transportation Security Directorate if the new Department of Homeland Security is to be as effective as we need it to be. I hope we are able to take a look at this structural issue as the debate proceeds.

The President proposed that the new department contain a component to assess the Nation's vulnerabilities to terrorism, analyze information regarding threats to our homeland, and match the threat assessments to the nation's vulnerabilities to help prioritize our homeland security efforts. The President's proposal was designed to fill a gap in the Federal Government's intelligence capabilities. While a number of agencies conduct a variety of threat assessments, and a few agencies conduct narrowly focused vulnerability assessments, no one in the federal government married the threats with the vulnerabilities to develop national policy. The committee substitute differs from the President's proposal by splitting the intelligence analysis component of the new department from the infrastructure protection component and creating two distinct organizations within the new department.

I support the establishment of an intelligence capability in the new department, but I believe the President's proposal is more sound than the Committee's approach. I will discuss this later.

Clearly, one of the greatest strengths we have to employ against potential enemies of our nation is technology. The President proposed a component of the new department to focus on weapons of mass destruction, which the President believes are not receiving adequate attention from existing agencies. Building on the President's proposal, Chairman LIEBERMAN, Senator DOMENICI, Chairman BINGAMAN, and I worked to develop a Science and Technology Directorate to develop and focus a concerted national effort, relying on resources the Federal Government has already deployed, primarily the National Laboratories and their partnerships, that will develop new technologies to combat terrorist threats.

Thus far, the department that both the President and the Committee propose focuses its efforts on prevention, on before-the-fact counter-terrorism activities. The proposals go further, however, by bringing in as part of the new department the responsibilities for consequence management, for the after-the-fact efforts. The main component of this aspect of the proposals is the inclusion of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in the new Department of Homeland Security.

By bringing together the management of the prevention responsibilities and the consequence management responsibilities, we hope to eliminate bureaucratic impediments and unify diverse bureaucracies, improve coordination, find and exploit appropriate synergies, and strengthen the Federal Government's entire homeland security effort.

We must be realistic about this reorganization. It is mammoth. It will take years of exacting effort to get it done. Congress may be called upon again to legislate changes to the new department. Let us not forget that many believe that the Defense Department was not fully realized until 1986, almost 40 years after its creation, when Congress enacted the Goldwater-Nickles Act.

When the President first proposed this massive homeland security reorganization, I did some research into the mergers of private companies. My staff and I have consulted with management and merger experts in the private sector and in academia. I regret that their analysis of the prospect for success was largely pessimistic. Many private sector mergers fail. The problems are obvious: blending corporate cultures and product lines is not a simple task, chief executive officers who have been through mergers that were smaller and much less complicated than this one give us only about a 20 or 30 percent chance of success. These odds are not promising. It makes me wonder what we need to do to improve those odds. The transition period will be particularly difficult. In some ways, it will be like an elephant on roller skates attempting to learn to juggle.

The proposed reorganization will be greatly complicated by the fact that several of the agencies being transferred currently are themselves dysfunctional from a management standpoint. A lack of coordination, improper payments, waste, missing equipment, human capital shortcomings, and program inefficiencies are all serious problems confronting the Federal Government at large. These problems will piggy-back their way into the new department with the incoming component agencies and will limit its effectiveness unless we address them here.

The management challenges facing this Department are in many respects a reflection of the Federal Government as a whole. For years, the Governmental Affairs Committee has had parades of witnesses and reports telling us that the executive branch and Congress must together do a better job of managing the taxpayers' money. Simply put, we are a government that cannot pass an audit.

Last year, the Government Affairs Committee released a report titled "Government at the Brink," that highlighted some of the waste, fraud, and mismanagement that pervades our Federal Government. Unfortunately, this new department is inheriting a number of agencies that were the focus of that report. The Immigration and Naturalization Service lacks sufficient staff resources to perform intelligence functions; the Customs Service cannot rely on its data systems to determine where the workload is heaviest and therefore where to assign its employees; the Federal Emergency management Agency, FEMA, faces significant problems in managing its grants, and the list goes on and on.

These are not partisan problems. They developed and have existed in both Republican and Democratic administrations. They have flourished when Democrats controlled both Houses of Congress, when Republicans controlled both Houses of Congress, when Republicans controlled both Houses of Congress, and when there was split control of Congress.

While we cannot cure these government-wide problems in this bill, we must recognize them, learn from our experience with them, and try to avoid these problems in the future as we create this new Department.

The current management paradigms for the Government that try to address these problems are largely the creation of the post-World War II expansion of the executive branch. They are largely premised on a command-and-control approach to management. These paradigms are out of date for the modern, largely white-collar, technological workforce needed by the Federal Government to meet the challenges of the 21st century. The current management structure throughout the executive branch puts no premium on accountability. Managers find it difficult to reward good performers, and even more difficult to sanction poor performers. Efforts by employees and managers to find new ways to meeting agency missions are rebuffed, often by political appointees who have only short-term goals in mind. These appointees rarely see the value of major management reforms whose benefits may not accrue to the agency and its leaders for years to come and long after they are gone.

For a number of years, both the legislative and executive branches have been promoting performance-based management. The primary legislative reform to promote a new emphasis on results is the Government Performance and Results Act—we call it the Results Act—which was enacted by a Democratic Congress during a Democratic administration. President Bush and his staff at the Office of Management and Budget have made great efforts to make performance-based management a reality throughout the executive branch. The President has developed a management agenda that, when fully implemented, will force agency managers to focus more closely on the results they are achieving with the resources Congress and the taxpayers provide to them.

Congress, which started the revolution toward performance-based managing in Government, should encourage the executive branch to continue to increase its emphasis on managing for results. We should be a partner with the President in encouraging new management techniques and giving Federal managers the tools they need and the flexibility they require to accomplish the missions we assign to them. In return, we must demand greater accountability from the President and those he appoints to manage Federal agencies.

Even with this emphasis by both branches of Government on better management, the results are mixed at best. Each year, the GAO continues to place the same agencies and the same Departments on its list of entities that are at high risk for waste, fraud, and mismanagement, demonstrating how deep and seemingly intractable this problem is—which brings us to our present consideration: We simply must give this new department and this new Secretary the management tools with which to carry out this new massive and vitally important job.

The sheer volume of people, property, and assets involved in the new department is overwhelming. Coupled with our expectations that this new department will be the cure that will strengthen our domestic security, I fear that we are setting ourselves up for failure if we do not provide the new Secretary with the flexibility to manage the department properly.

By maintaining the status quo, not only will the Secretary be required to pay the same salary to two counterterrorism experts with vastly different performance and ability levels, we are also prohibiting the Secretary from accessing a single cent of the unexpended funds from agencies that are transferred to the new department to assist in the transition. Instead, the Secretary must appeal to Congress to enact enabling legislation each and every time the Secretary of the new department needs some flexibility to reorganize or get this department up and running successfully.

Supporters of the legislation before us disagree. They argue that the Secretary does not need additional managerial tools or flexibility to take on this monumental task. It is true that flexibility is not needed to set up another Federal bureaucracy that resembles the rest of Government. Flexibility is not needed to replicate the problems that pervade our Government in terms of Federal workforce management, financial management, information technology management, and program overlap and duplication. Managerial tools and flexibility are not needed to create another Federal Department that ranks at the top of the General Accounting Office's "high-risk" list of agencies in the Government that are most vulnerable to waste, fraud, and mismanagement. Managerial tools and flexibility are not needed to create a civil service, that, according to one expert, Paul Light, of the Brookings Institution, and former staff member to the Governmental Affairs Committee:

Underwhelms at virtually every task it undertakes. It is sluggish at hiring, hyper-inflated at appraising, permissive at promoting, weak-kneed at disciplining, and mind-numbingly elongated at firing.

Our goal in this new department must not be to replicate the failures Mr. Light outlines, but, rather, to make improvements. If we cannot improve our well-known operational shortcomings now that our Nation's security is at issue, when in the world will we ever be able to do so?

According to the legislation before us today, the mission of the new department is to "promote homeland security," "prevent terrorist attacks," and "reduce the vulnerability of the United States to terrorism." I question how this new department will possibly be able to fulfill its mission if it is bogged down by the same old persistent management problems that have faced the rest of our Government for so many years.

First and foremost, I think most of us would agree with Paul Light, and other experts, that the Federal civil service system, the process the Federal Government uses to hire and promote workers, is broken.

Madam President, this is a logical stopping point for me. If I am reading the clock correctly, we are very close to the time of recess for our briefing. So, with that, I yield the floor.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until the hour of 3:30 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 2:28 p.m., recessed until 3:30 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. REID).

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002—Continued

AMENDMENT NO. 4486 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4471

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE] proposes an amendment numbered 4486.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit the Secretary of Homeland Security from contracting with any corporate expatriate)

After section 171, insert the following:

(2) after the acquisition at least 50 percent of the stock (by vote or value) of the entity is held—

(A) in the case of an acquisition with respect to a domestic corporation, by former shareholders of the domestic corporation by reason of holding stock in the domestic corporation, or

(B) in the case of an acquisition with respect to a domestic partnership, by former partners of the domestic partnership by reason of holding a capital or profits interest in the domestic partnership, and

(3) the expanded affiliated group which after the acquisition includes the entity does not have substantial business activities in the foreign country in which or under the law of which the entity is created or organized when compared to the total business activities of such expanded affiliated group.

(3) FOREIGN INCORPORATED ENTITY.—The term “foreign incorporated entity” means any entity which is, or but for subsection (b) would be, treated as a foreign corporation for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(d) WAIVER.—The President may waive subsection (a) with respect to any specific contract if the President certifies to Congress that the waiver is required in the interest of national security.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I have 5 minutes, without losing my place in the debate, as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator is recognized for 5 minutes. Following his statement, he will have the floor.

(The remarks of Mr. WELLSTONE are printed in today's RECORD under “Morning Business.”)

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise to speak to a very simple amendment I introduced. I say to my colleagues, this actually was passed in the House in the homeland defense bill. It certainly is relevant that we bar the Secretary of Homeland Security from entering into contracts with U.S. companies that give up U.S. citizenship to avoid U.S. taxes.

I need to really summarize this amendment again. This is a very simple amendment that would bar the Secretary of Homeland Security from entering into contracts with U.S. companies that give up U.S. citizenship to avoid U.S. taxes.

To about 99.9 percent of people in Minnesota and probably to about 99.9 percent of the people in the country, this is a very reasonable proposition. My colleagues might remember that I had an amendment like this to the Defense appropriations bill which passed here by unanimous vote.

Before I get into the specifics of my amendment, let me make a quick comment about the relevancy of the amendment. I gather there is an agreement among the majority leader and the minority leader to move all nonrelevant amendments. That agreement won't affect this amendment because it was drafted to be relevant. It deals with government contracts. It deals with the Department of Homeland Security.

The underlying House bill, as I just mentioned, has a similar provision. So the substance of my amendment is fully relevant to this bill. This is the appropriate place to have this debate, as we debate the question of whether we will have a Department of Homeland Security.

Former U.S. companies that have renounced their citizenship currently hold at least $2 billion worth of contracts with the Federal Government. I don't think companies that aren't willing to pay their fair share of taxes should be able to hold those contracts.

U.S. companies that play by the rules, that pay their fair share of taxes, should not be forced to compete with bad actors who can undercut their bids because of the tax loophole. I had a debate on a similar provision on “Nightline.” I said that the vast majority of companies in Minnesota and around the country, if they had the lawyers and the accountants, wouldn't do this because they wouldn't believe it was the right thing to do, or many of the smaller businesses in my State and all around the country don't have the lawyers and the accountants to really get such a loophole.

In the last couple of years, a number of prominent U.S. corporations, using creative paperwork, have transformed themselves into Bermuda corporations in order to avoid paying their share of U.S. taxes. These new Bermuda companies are basically shell corporations. They have no staff, no offices, no business activity in Bermuda. This exists for the sole purpose of shielding income from the IRS. That is what this is about.

By the way, I am talking about shielding not just profits made abroad but profits made in our country that are just shifted. There is a lot of cooking of the books that goes on. Does that sound familiar to any Senator?

U.S. tax law contains many provisions designed to expose such creative accounting and to require U.S. companies that are foreign in name only to pay the same taxes as other domestic corporations. But these bad corporate former citizens exploit a specific loophole in current law so that the country is treated as foreign for tax purposes and, therefore, pays no U.S. taxes on its foreign income—or, for that matter, on all-too-often a good part of its U.S. income. Additionally, these companies can use accounting tricks, as documented by the Senate Finance Committee in their investigations of this issue, to reduce their U.S. income on paper and their U.S. tax on even their U.S. income.

By the way, I thank staff on the Senate Finance Committee, majority and minority, for their help in working on this amendment. We have tried to do this in the right way. I will repeat this point. They use these accounting tricks, which have been documented by our Finance Committee, to reduce their U.S. income on paper and reduce U.S. tax even on U.S. income.

These are Enron-like schemes involving sham loans and other “Imclone” transfers that allow these companies to reduce taxes on a U.S. company, including income from Government contracts. This is called earnings stripping.

I have spent the last 2 weeks, or thereabouts, at the Minnesota State Fair. About half the State's population comes. It is quite a happening. It is the essence of grassroots democracy. I will tell you one thing, people are really indignant about a lot of these inside corporate scandals.

Some Senators may say: PAUL, you are just jumping on the issue. Well, I don't know; this has been my work for years. I will tell you this. Between having some of your savings and putting it in stock and seeing it erode in value, or your savings in a 401(k) eroding, or CEOs telling them they had an independent audit done and everything was great, to invest more of their 401(k), at the same time he dumped his stock and made $230 million in profit—people are tired of this behavior.

This is all about corporate accountability. That is what this amendment is all about. What I am saying is that these companies are not paying their fair share. If they want to renounce their citizenship so they don't have to pay their fair share of taxes, fine, but don't expect to get Government contracts.

Now, the loophole that we want to get rid of gives tens of millions of dollars of tax breaks to major multinational companies, and these are tax cheats. It also puts other companies that are unwilling or unable to use this loophole at a competitive disadvantage. No Minnesota company, or no American company, should be penalized for staying put in our country while others that renounce their U.S. citizenship get a tax break. This is a simple proposition. No company that does the right thing and stays in our country should be penalized for staying put while others renounce their U.S. citizenship just to get a tax break, to not pay their fair share of taxes.

The problem is that when these companies don't pay their fair share, the rest of American taxpayers and businesses are stuck with the bill. I think I can safely say that very few of the small businesses I have visited in Detroit Lakes, or Mankato, or Duluth, or Minneapolis, or Northfield, or Faribault, or on the Iron Range, can avail themselves of the Bermuda Triangle. As a matter of fact, they would not view it as a very patriotic thing to do. They cannot afford the big-name tax lawyers and accountants to show them how to do their books Enron style, but they probably would not do it anyway if it meant renouncing their citizenship. So the price they pay for their good citizenship, good corporate citizenship, their good business citizenship, is a higher tax bill.

Now, the House passed an amendment similar to this amendment on their homeland security bill. My amendment uses a different mechanism than the House bill to get at the same bad behavior. I have worked with Senator GRASSLEY and Senator BAUCUS to conform this amendment with their bill that would close the tax loophole. That is what I ultimately want to do. Here is how my amendment would work. If a U.S. company reincorporated in a foreign country and 50 percent or more of the shareholders of the new foreign corporation were the same as the shareholders of the old U.S. company, then that company would be barred from contracting with any homeland security agency if the company did not have substantial business activity in its foreign home. It is that simple. That is a perfect operational definition of a sham operation.

In other words, this is a two-part test, and if a company met both tests, it would be barred from contracting with the Department of Homeland Security.

First test: Are a majority of the shareholders of the new company the same as the shareholders of the old U.S. company? This test is designed to separate the true purchase of two real companies, which is fine, from a sham transaction done just for tax purposes when the owners change only the home country.

Second test: Does the new foreign company have substantial business activity in its new foreign home? If it doesn't, then the new foreign parent company is really just a paper shell designed to take advantage of a tax loophole.

A lot of this is self-explanatory. I am not a lawyer, and some of the technical material is hard for me, but this is not too difficult to figure out.

This is contained in the Grassley-Baucus tax bill. I believe Congress will close this tax loophole this year. There is growing support for doing so in the House. I have introduced legislation to close 24 loopholes, and the Senate Finance Committee has reported a version of this legislation, which I strongly support, that would do so as well. It is not appropriate for the Senate to close the tax loophole on this bill—this is not a tax bill—but it is appropriate for us to say that if a U.S. company wants to bid for a contract for U.S. homeland security work, then it should not renounce its U.S. citizenship for a tax break.

We all make sacrifices in a time of war. The only sacrifice this amendment asks of Federal contractors is that they pay their fair share of taxes like everybody else.

Mr. President, when I was talking about a Mr. Dennis Kozlowski, the reason I mentioned it, this was about Tyco Company, which has taken advantage of this scheme. It is highly lucrative for these corporations. Tyco International saved $400 million last year by chartering its space in Bermuda—$400 million. About a month ago, we learned that those savings may have helped the company buy the CEO a $19 million home in Boca Raton and a $6,000 shower curtain for his place in Manhattan. That was in the Wall Street Journal. Here is Tyco International which saves $400 million, and the CEO gets a lot of help to buy a home and also uses $6,000 to purchase a shower curtain for his place in Manhattan.

Was the company using some of the money that they received in Government contracts—$220 million—to pay for that home and apparently a very nice shower curtain? Should we feel sorry for these corporations that have to scrape and pinch to find some tax savings? This is a corporate responsibility issue. I think in the House of Representatives, altogether, there were over 300 votes for a very similar amendment.

I know some of my colleagues have an honest-to-goodness philosophical objection to this approach, and I understand that and respect them for it. On this one, maybe it is the populist in me, but to me this is a straightforward proposition. If these companies want to engage in this kind of sham or scam, they want to renounce their citizenship, they are not going to get U.S. contracts from this new homeland defense agency. That is what this amendment says.

I will wait for other colleagues to speak. I will say to my colleague from Tennessee that I have been willing to accommodate anybody's schedule—if people want to put off the debate for a while and vote tomorrow, or whatever he wants to do. I wanted to begin and get the discussion going on the amendment, whatever fits in with the schedule, obviously.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator REID and Senator BAUCUS be added as original cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota. Senator LIEBERMAN can perhaps consult with the Senator from Minnesota as to the way we will proceed. If the Senator is willing to set aside the amendment for a moment, we will bring it back in due course and proceed with the discussion, if that is agreeable.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Connecticut, I will accommodate his schedule. I want to get the amendment up and have a debate. If the Senator from Connecticut wants to lay the amendment aside—whatever best accommodates his schedule. As long as my colleagues will be nice to me in the debate and praise me, I am willing to do anything he wants.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. It is easy to find common ground. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. I suggest Senator THOMPSON and I engage in some conversation with the Senator from Minnesota. For that purpose, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, my understanding is the pending business is the amendment offered by Senator WELLSTONE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, Senator WELLSTONE has offered an amendment that deals with a subject I mentioned this morning, and I wanted to speak a bit more about that subject. It is a subject that, by its title, most people would not think much about. It is called inversion.

What does inversion mean with respect to corporate America these days? Inversion is a process by which a corporation decides to renounce its American citizenship. A number of high-profile corporations have done that, saying, we wish to renounce our American citizenship and become citizens of another country—in a couple of cases, Bermuda. So an American corporation says, we no longer want to be an American corporation, we want to be a Bermuda corporation.

Why would a U.S. corporation decide it wants to renounce its citizenship? The answer, of course, is very simple. Because there are circumstances under which, in the renouncement of citizenship by a corporation, called an inversion, they can save millions, or tens of millions, or perhaps hundreds of millions, of dollars in taxation. So some companies make a decision, we would like to no longer be U.S. citizens in order that we might save money on our tax bill. I happen to think that is unpatriotic.

We are at war. Our country is at war with terrorists. Nearly 1 year ago, on 9/11, we were attacked with unspeakable horror by terrorists in New York City, in Washington, DC, at the Pentagon, and then there was the aircraft that crashed in Pennsylvania.

Since that time, of course, we have had a remarkable speech by President Bush, one of the best I have heard in my service in Congress, calling this country to cooperate and to work together for a common purpose, to wage this war on terrorism. Then in the middle of all of this, we read stories about corporations that decide they want to renounce their citizenship so they can save on taxation.

I ask a question of a company that decides it wants to renounce its American citizenship: If it gets in trouble somewhere around the world, if some dictator wants to expropriate its assets in some country around the world, whom is it going to call? The Bermuda Navy? The Bermuda Marines? The Bermuda Army? I do not think so.

It is shameful to see companies do what are called inversions and renounce their American citizenship. They have a perfect legal right to do it under today's law, but there are ways to try to plug that hole in our Tax Code, and a number of us are working on that.

The Senator from Minnesota offers another proposal with respect to this specific bill, and that is to say those companies that decide they want to renounce their American citizenship should not be bidding for contracts under homeland security.

We have a lot to do with respect to the needs in this country, and the requirement that we all get together, work together, stay together, to fight terrorism and do what we must as Americans to respond to this threat. There is something horribly out of step with our requirements as Americans, our requirements of citizenship, our requirements as the stewards of this democracy, to see some corporations in this country decide they no longer want to be American, they no longer want to have U.S. citizenship. Technically and currently under the law, they have a right to renounce their citizenship, but I think it sends a terrible message to our country and to the world when they do that.

Yes, they can save on taxes by doing it perhaps. The question then will be: Who will pay the taxes they do not pay? Which other Americans would they choose to burden with this additional tax bill? Americans working in the manufacturing plants they used to have in this country or perhaps still have in this country? Do they want to shift the burden to working people? That is what happens with respect to inversions.

I indicated I am going to hold some hearings on a couple of these issues. There is some unfinished business with respect to this issue of corporate responsibility. We passed a bill and the President signed it, and that is important because we have seen now the emergence and the disclosures of corporate scandals unparalleled in my lifetime.

You know, I have a card in my pocket. I put it in my pocket this morning, because it reminded me of something important. I was on an airplane recently. I was sitting in an aisle seat, and a man sitting two rows ahead of me in the aisle seat across the aisle, as we landed and before we disembarked, passed me his business card. His business card named him and the company for which he worked. He is president of the company. He wrote on the back of the card with a ballpoint pen and passed it to me. I had never met the man, did not know him. He said:

Dear Senator DORGAN, Good morning. I am president of a corporation. I work very hard and I am honest. I believe there are more like me than not.

This is the president of a corporation. His first name is John.

I sent John a letter and said: I do not ever speak of corporate scandal without saying I think we ought to understand American business by and large in this country is run by wonderful men and women, good stewards of the investors' money, people who want to do the right thing, people who do not try to find where the line is and cross the line, people who do not cook the books, people who work long hours and are honest and do the right thing. That is the rule in American business, in my judgment. But it is also true that the emergence and the disclosures of these corporate scandals tarnish all in American business and injure those honest, hard-working people trying to run American companies. It injures the ability to raise capital because it destroys people's faith in the system. They invest in a stock in a company they have never visited. They buy a stock in a company they do not know much about, but they trust the CEO, they trust the financial statements, they trust the accounting firm that reviewed the statements, they trust the law firm that gave advice to the CEO, they trust the board of directors. So they invest in a share of stock in a company they have never visited or never seen.

But there have been far too many instances recently of corporate executives acting in complete disregard of their responsibilities as business leaders. And although we recently passed an accounting reform bill to tackle some of these problems, we have unfinished business. One issue involves inversions, the issue that Senator WELLSTONE is bringing to our attention today. Another important issue involves bankruptcies, and an amendment I tried to offer to the corporate responsibility bill. That amendment was blocked by the Senator from Texas, Mr. GRAMM. He blocked that amendment for a couple of days, and I was not able to put it on the bill, but it deals with this. It is an amendment that says, if in the year prior to the bankruptcy of a corporation, the major executives in the corporation are receiving millions of dollars in incentive and bonus payments, there ought to be a disgorgement and recapture of that money to go to the stockholders and the employees. It is very simple.

Since the time that I was blocked in offering that amendment, the Financial Times did an investigation and an evaluation of the 25 largest bankruptcies in our country since January of last year.

What did it show? It showed that 230 top executives in the 25 largest companies that filed for bankruptcy took $3 billion out of those companies in compensation as those companies headed towards bankruptcy.

Well, guess what. The investors lost their shirts, they lost their life savings, and, as the Financial Times says, the barons of bankruptcy, the executives running companies into bankruptcy, went off with a pocketful of gold.

There is something wrong with that. That is a piece of unfinished business.

We ought to pass legislation that says prior bankruptcy, if executives are getting bonus and incentive payments as this company heads towards bankruptcy, there ought to be the right to recapture that money and use it to help offset the perks and costs with respect to investors and employees.

That is one piece of unfinished business. Another piece deals with inversions and the tax with respect to those corporations that want to renounce their American citizenship. There is unfinished business with respect to corporate responsibility. We did a wonderful thing in passing that bill. Senator PAUL SARBANES deserves our unending thanks for the work he did to put that bill together. The President signed it. It is a bill destined to give confidence to people, but there is more to do.

If we stop here we will have stopped before we got to the intersection. There is more to do. Part of that deals with inversion, and part of it deals with disgorgement and recapturing of funds as CEOs took companies into bankruptcy. I intend, in the coming weeks, to be among those in Congress who will address these issues. We should not decide the bill we passed represents the end of corporate responsibility legislation in the Senate.

I conclude by saying the fellow that passed me his business card on an airplane a few days ago is right. He said: I'm president of a corporation. I work very hard and I'm honest. I believe there are more like me than not.

He is right about that. Absolutely. And on behalf of people like him, we have a responsibility to be tough and to go after those who abuse their trust and steal money. We have a responsibility to see to it that they do more than 2 years of hard tennis at a minimum security institution somewhere.

The Senator from Minnesota does us a service by offering this subject on the floor of the Senate. There is more to do on inversion, but there is more to do beyond inversion and corporate responsibility, including disgorgement and recapturing of bankruptcy incentive and bonus payments to CEOs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

AMENDMENT NO. 4490 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4486

Mr. REID. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] proposes an amendment numbered 4490 to amendment 4486.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit the Secretary of Homeland Security from contracting with any corporate expatriate)

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

(2) after the acquisition at least 50 percent of the stock (by vote or value) of the entity is held—

(A) in the case of an acquisition with respect to a domestic corporation, by former shareholders of the domestic corporation by reason of holding stock in the domestic corporation, or

(B) in the case of an acquisition with respect to a domestic partnership, by former partners of the domestic partnership by reason of holding a capital or profits interest in the domestic partnership, and

(3) the expanded affiliated group which after the acquisition includes the entity does not have substantial business activities in the foreign country in which or under the law of which the entity is created or organized when compared to the total business activities of such expanded affiliated group.

(ii) stock of such entity which is sold in a public offering related to the acquisition described in subsection (b)(1).

(B) PLAN DEEMED IN CERTAIN CASES.—If a foreign incorporated entity acquires directly or indirectly substantially all of the properties of a domestic corporation or partnership during the 4-year period beginning on the date which is 2 years before the ownership requirements of subsection (b)(2) are met, such actions shall be treated as pursuant to a plan.

(C) CERTAIN TRANSFERS DISREGARDED.—The transfer of properties or liabilities (including by contribution or distribution) shall be disregarded if such transfers are part of a plan a principal purpose of which is to avoid the purposes of this section.

(3) FOREIGN INCORPORATED ENTITY.—The term “foreign incorporated entity” means any entity which is, or but for subsection (b) would be, treated as a foreign corporation for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(4) OTHER DEFINITIONS.—The terms “person”, “domestic”, and “foreign” have the meanings given such terms by paragraphs (1), (4), and (5) of section 7701(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, respectively.

This section shall take effect one day after the date of this bill's enactment.

Mr. REID. The Senator from New Hampshire is here and is going to ask that the present amendments be set aside so that he can offer an amendment. I will first take just a few minutes.

First of all, I commend the Senator from Minnesota for this amendment. I was on the Senate floor when he offered this amendment on a previous piece of legislation and spent some time talking about the merits of his legislation. It passed by voice vote. The Senator from Minnesota recognizes in the House something comparable to this has passed, so we have no problems with this legislation as to it being relevant or germane.

This legislation is important to reestablish confidence in what is going on in the country. This amendment is designed to attack a tax loophole that has allowed scores of U.S. corporations to move their headquarters, on paper only, to tax haven countries to avoid paying their fair share of our taxes.

Specifically, the amendment bars the Department of Homeland Security from awarding Government contracts for those corporate tax runaways.

It is a sad reality that under our current law these corporate expatriates are technically legal—I say technically. Legal or not, there is no reason the U.S. Government should reward tax runaways with lucrative Government contracts.

I had one of these big contractors talk to me. He brought with him one of my friends who was no longer in the Senate. Because of my close, warm feelings for the person who brought this man in, I wanted to try to help. But after listening, I said I cannot help because it is wrong.

These corporations have turned their back on their country in their country's hour of need, but they continue to come to Congress and the executive agencies with their hands outstretched asking for rewards. We need to end as soon as we can the practice of companies that hold billions of dollars in Federal contracts renouncing U.S. citizenship. It is wrong that the companies that play by the rules and meet the responsibilities of the country should be forced to compete with bad actors who shirk their tax bill.

If the corporations want Federal contracts so badly, I have advice: Come home. Come back to your country, to our country, and you will be eligible to bid on homeland security contracts. If you do not, you can't. Go lobby Bermuda or the Cayman Islands, but leave us alone.

Let me talk about a few of the companies involved that have handled this in an improper manner: Ingersoll-Rand. When I was a little boy and went with my dad down in the mines, Ingersoll-Rand was the name on the compressor that was above ground and on the jackhammer he used underground. In my mind, even today, I can see my father pick up that jackhammer and push it into that hard land and drill. Ingersoll-Rand is all he had, all I remember, an Ingersoll-Rand jackhammer. This company was founded in 1905. They have been headquartered in Woodcliff, NJ, for many decades, mostly manufacturing jackhammers, bobcat vehicles, club car golf carts, hardware products, security devices, control systems. In fact, one of the things they talk about in advertisements is their jackhammers made Mount Rushmore.

But times have changed. Last December, 3 months after September 11, Ingersoll-Rand put the finishing touches on renouncing its U.S. corporate citizenship. It filed paperwork to set up three British employees in a little office in Hamilton, Bermuda. Now it can avoid paying $40 million each year in U.S. taxes. This will not stop Ingersoll-Rand from lobbying for U.S. Government contracts. As we speak, the corporation holds over $40 million in Government contracts, virtually all of which are directly related to homeland defense or the military. These days, the company has been lobbying the Government to buy its airport security screening devices. If they renounce their Bermuda citizenship, I am happy to work with them and let them get the contract. That is fine.

There are many other companies. Fruit of the Loom, headquartered in Bowling Green, KY, for years, last year decided it wanted to do something else and moved offshore. They have millions of dollars in contracts.

Cooper Industries makes tools and hardware needed to transmit natural gas. They were founded in 1833 in Mount Vernon, OH. Last year, they had revenues of $4 billion, net income of $230 million, and they decided they could make a few extra bucks by moving offshore. That is what they have done.

I have page after page of companies that have decided to go offshore. Yet they have large amounts of Government contracts, where the underlying company had scores, hundreds of offshore Government corporations, legal entities set up so they could play around with our money.

Accenture, APW, Carnival Corporation, Cooper Industries, Enron, Everest Reinsurance, Foster Wheeler, Fruit of the Loom, Global Crossings, Gold Reserve, Halliburton, Harken Oil—Halliburton had units in St. Lucia, Liechtenstein, Barbados, Cayman Islands, Cyprus, the Netherlands Antilles, and the British Virgin Islands, among others—Helen of Troy, Leucadia Corporation, on and on.

The time has come. If they want to move offshore, let them get their contracts someplace else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, my understanding is the pending business is the Wellstone amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent the Wellstone amendment be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I couldn't hear. What was the request?

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. The request I made was to temporarily lay aside the Wellstone amendment for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I will not debate at this time.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield the floor?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I object. Will the Senator from New Hampshire restate his unanimous consent request?

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent that the Wellstone amendment be temporarily laid aside for the purposes of offering my amendment on armed pilots.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4491 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4471

Mr. SMITH. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. SMITH), for himself, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. BURNS, Mr. BUNNING, and Mr. MILLER, proposes an amendment numbered 4491 to amendment 4471.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text Of Amendments.")

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, this amendment is offered on behalf of myself and Senators BOXER, MURKOWSKI, BUNNING, BURNS, the Senator presiding, Senator MILLER, and others. Because there is an agreement with some of my colleagues that we would not debate it today, I will not take any further time from the Senate, other than to say that this amendment is the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism and Cabin Defense Act of 2002, which will be an amendment that will provide help for training for those flight attendants in the cabin, and for pilots to be able to carry weapons, lethal weapons, in the cockpit to protect our country, our citizens, and those in the aircraft from the aircraft becoming weapons of mass destruction.

The intention is to debate this tomorrow when my other colleagues are available, at a time to which the leaders will mutually agree. I very much appreciate the assistant leader, Mr. REID, allowing me to offer the amendment at this time.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I would like to comment on the bill as it stands and some of the challenges relating to it rather than any specific amendment.

All of us, as we want to arrive at a position, fall back upon our own experience. I have some experience that I think is relative to this situation which I would share with the Senate. I have shared it with some members of the committee, but I have found in my time in the Senate that there is no such thing as repetition. Every speech is given as if it is brand new and no one has ever heard any of this before. I have learned that from some of my more senior colleagues here.

First when I arrived here, I found it a little distressing, but after I found out how often people listen to what you say, I decided it is probably a pretty good thing, because repeating something over and over again in this body, many times, is the only way you can get anybody to listen to you.

With that, let me share with you and my colleagues, and any others who may be listening, my experience with a similar situation when I served in the first term of the Nixon administration.

In the 18 months prior to President Nixon's election, Joe Califano, as the Chief of Staff to President Johnson, conceived of the idea of the Department of Transportation. We were one of the few industrialized countries in the world that did not have a ministry of transport, as it is called in most other countries. We found that our transportation functions were scattered all over the Government. Mr. Califano, consulting with President Johnson, convinced the President that the time had come to create the American version of a ministry of transport. So the Department of Transportation was born.

On paper, it looks like a department that was created at the Harvard Business School. You had a series of assistant secretaries who were staff officers. You had a series of administrators who were line officers. It was put together with modern business terminology and a complete understanding of how a large organization should be formed.

It took the Federal Highway Administration out of the Department of Commerce, where it was such a significant part of that Department that they had two Under Secretaries, one an Under Secretary for Transportation and the other an Under Secretary for everything else. It took the FAA from its status as an independent agency reporting directly to the President. It was called the Federal Aviation Agency. It was renamed the Federal Aviation Administration so that the terminology would be comparable.

It took the Coast Guard out of the Treasury Department. It goes all the way back to the time of Thomas Jefferson, perhaps, as being part of the Treasury Department looking for smugglers so they could collect duties on people who would bring goods into the United States. The Coast Guard represents a significant part of our transportation activity, and it was recognized it no longer belonged in the Treasury Department.

There was a fledgling group called the Urban Mass Transit Administration that was over at HUD, the Department of Housing and Urban Development. But they recognized it had nothing, really, to do with housing and belonged over in the new Department of Transportation.

They looked at some other areas where there needed to be some initiatives in transportation and created some new agencies solely for those—the Federal Rail Administration being the chief among them. Then it took some other isolated agencies, folded them in, put them on a piece of paper, and said: Here is your new department.

Alan Boyd, who was the Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation, was made the new Secretary of Transportation and for 18 months struggled with the challenge of trying to bring these groups together. His service was terminated when President Johnson left office. John Volpe came down, as former Governor of the State of Massachusetts, to assume the Secretaryship of the Department of Transportation. The Under Secretary was James Beggs, who came over from NASA, where he had performed excellent service as an associate administrator there. I was hired to run the congressional liaison function for the Department.

As I say, the Department was 18 months old. When I walked into it to take over my new duties, I found that almost no one knew what those new duties would be because the challenge of bringing together, at a departmental level, all of the people involved in congressional liaison had not been successfully met in the 18 months previous. I am not putting any blame on Secretary Boyd or on any of the people who worked with him during that 18 months. As I became acquainted with the Department and its functions, I realized how difficult it was to bring together agencies that had no common culture, no common background, that had been operating in many different places across the Government, and turn them into a clearly, smoothly functioning single unit.

Indeed, there were some people in that organization who refused to admit they were even members of the Department of Transportation.

An anecdote: One of the personnel officers who worked for the Assistant Secretary for Administration got on the elevator and punched the button that said eighth floor. Someone behind her said: You are one of those DOT types. The eighth floor was the floor that had been recommissioned for the offices of the Secretary. The tenth floor was where the Administrator of the FAA worked. She turned around and said: We are all DOT types.

Her remark was not favorably received. The folks behind her in the elevator said: We are FAA. You are DOT.

It is a small anecdote, but it demonstrates that after 18 months there were still people who had a hard time bringing themselves into the new Department.

To my own specific experience, I found that the FAA still had its own congressional relations function. Urban Mass Transit didn't have one at all. They had not really brought anything over with them from HUD. The Federal Highway Administration had a well-entrenched congressional liaison function, and the Coast Guard had been at it for close to 200 years, and they were not about to give that up to anybody as unimportant as a Cabinet officer.

The new agencies that had been created didn't have any service. They didn't know what they were doing. Those officers who had been trying to perform congressional relations functions for the Secretary and the team of Assistant Secretaries that had been created under him had been floundering and flopping around trying to find their way in this morass.

Secretary Volpe and Under Secretary Beggs gave me the challenge of trying to pull all of this together. It was one of the most interesting and difficult experiences of my then-young life. That was enough years ago that I was a young man when I undertook that.

Eventually, we were able to pull all of those functions together into a single office reporting directly to the Secretary. I rearranged all of the functions so that everyone involved in that activity reported to me either directly or through my deputy. I said: I will give you an assignment—as if we were a consulting firm dealing with clients. You, sir, your client is the FAA. You, sir, your client is Urban Mass Transit, and so on. You will not be acceptable to me if your client is unhappy. If the Administrator of the FAA believes he is not getting the kind of congressional relations he deserves, he will complain directly to me as we meet together in the Secretary's staff meetings, and I will be around to see you. But at the same time, you work for me. And, through me, you work for Secretary Volpe.

This meant that when we had an issue that required more manpower and womanpower than that particular officer could provide, I could rally the resources of the office and the other officers to help on that particular issue at that particular time. We were much more flexible. I think we were much more efficient and effective.

As it turned out, a large percentage of President Nixon's domestic agenda fell under the Department of Transportation. Congress passed, with our help and liaison, a whole series of landmark bills setting down the transportation process for this country. It was one of the most stimulating experiences of my life.

What does that have to do with the Department of Homeland Security? In making the kinds of changes that I have described, I had to have management flexibility so that when, with the Secretary's authority, I didn't have—it came from the Secretary—I could say: You no longer work for the Administrator of the FAA; you now work for me. You no longer report to the Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration, you now work for me. This is how we are going to set your procedures, and this is how we are going to rationalize salaries within the office that I created.

I was able to do that because the enabling act that created the Department of Transportation gave the Secretary management flexibility to move people around within the Department without coming back to the Congress for approval. He had flexibility to change payroll.

One of the interesting things that occurred was that in the FAA, promotions were all made on even numbers; that is, you went from a GS-4 to a GS-6; from a GS-8 to a GS-10; from a GS-10 to a GS-12, and so on. In other parts of the Department they did two numbers per jump, but they were all on odd numbers.

As I brought all of these people together in the same offices, I had some GS-5's and GS-6's. The amount of money they were earning, frankly, was the same. It was very interesting to me, coming from the corporate world as I was at that time in this somewhat strange and challenging world of the U.S. personnel system. We had to rationalize that or the office didn't make any sense. We had to make some changes. We didn't do it in a way that damaged anyone. No one lost money. No one lost position. But someone had to transfer from the odd system to the even system, and adjustments had to be made. And they were made on the basis of what made the most sense for the office and how it would work. The flexibility that was written into the act made that possible.

One interesting thing that probably doesn't apply anymore but that came out of that experience was the result with respect to supergrades. In those days, a GS-16, GS-17, or GS-18 was called a supergrade, and each Department had a set number of supergrades. That was true of the Department of Transportation. I don't remember what the number was, but the Department could not have more than 25 or 35 or whatever the number was of supergrades.

As I went through this process of bringing all of these people together, I was able to walk into the Under Secretary's office and say: I am giving you back three supergrades—because so many of these people had held supergrade positions in the previous administration. The way we organized this, I only needed two supergrades—one for myself and one for my deputy and everybody else was a GS-10 or below.

I didn't realize what I was doing because the Under Secretary greeted me with one of the biggest smiles I have ever received and said: This is pure gold because there are other places in the Department where the positions deserve supergrades and I don't have any supergrades to give them. And you have just freed up three supergrades by virtue of your consolidation of this function.

I don't know where the supergrades went. But they went out to other deserving people.

That is why I feel so strongly in favor of President Bush's position that the Department of Homeland Security must be formed with flexibility for management and personnel and other decisions on the part of the Secretary. I have been there and I have seen how vital it is. If we had to go through the kinds of hoops that are created in the Federal personnel system in the reorganizing something as insignificant as my offices—I am talking about 30 to 35 people max; I am not talking about anything approaching the challenge of this new Department—if we had to go through all of those hoops in reorganizing my office, I would have spent the entire 2 years that I was there working on personnel issues and management issues instead of trying to get the program passed through the Congress—the landmark legislation that was passed. I still have the pens that President Nixon gave me and my picture in the Cabinet Room when those bills were signed. We would not have been able to get that done. We would have been snarled up in all of the internal management challenges of, well, we have to go to Congress to get this approved or that approved; we haven't got the flexibility to do it.

I have that personal experience that drives me to stand with the President on this issue and to say that I believe the President is correct when he says he will veto this bill, if that flexibility is not there.

None of us should have the false assumption that this Department will work for at least 3 and more likely 5 years. All of us should understand how difficult a management challenge this is going to be under the best of circumstances. The Department of Transportation, as I say, 18 months after its formation was still not working. John Volpe didn't come in and wave a magic wand to make it work overnight. John Volpe and Jim Beggs labored for a full 4 years beyond the 18 months that it had under President Johnson. It was only toward the end of those 4 years that you began to see things really meshed together and start to work together and see a real Department of Transportation instead of the old turf battles that had been there. The Department of Defense took longer than that to come together. It was the kind of reorganization more closely paralleling the size of the one we are now doing.

It is instructive to remember that the first Secretary of Defense, James Forrestal, committed suicide. The challenge of managing that difficult a bureaucracy was sufficiently great that this dedicated public servant—perhaps too dedicated because he took it so seriously—that he ultimately could not cope with it and committed suicide, which demonstrates how serious it is for us to do this right.

I do not want the new Secretary, whoever he or she may be, to have any more impediments placed on the challenge of making this Department work than are necessary. To not give the Secretary the management flexibility that the President has called for is asking for failure in this Department.

As I say, it is not going to work for at least 3, and more likely 5, years. That does not mean we should not do it. We should do it because if we wait a year, that will just push back a year the 3-to-5-year period that it will not work. But let's be realistic about it. Let's understand from the model of Government mergers, let's understand from the model of corporate mergers, how difficult this is going to be; and then let us, in the Congress, fashion a piece of legislation that says we are going to make it as easy as possible for the new Secretary to do all of the internal kinds of shifting and changing necessary to make it work closer to the 3-year figure than to the 5-year figure.

Now, I hope I am wrong. I hope it will work magnificently in 6 months. But life tells me that is not likely. So that is why I voted against this bill in committee. I said to Chairman LIEBERMAN: If you really needed my vote to report out this bill, I would give you my vote because I think the bill ought to be reported out. But since you don't need my vote, I want to register my deep concern about the management flexibility and lack thereof that is written into this bill. And the only way I can do that is to cast a vote against the bill.

Someone has asked me: Well, if it comes out of the Senate and the President is not given the management flexibility he has asked for, how will you vote on final passage? I will probably vote against it on final passage, even though some people say to me: Oh, let it go to conference and we'll fix it in conference.

I have learned around here the motto "let's fix it in conference" does not always work. Very often it comes back from conference worse than when it went to conference, and then you are stuck.

So I am dedicated to the creation of the new Department. I will do everything I can to help the President and the Congress pass legislation that makes sense. But I cannot, from my own experience, believe this makes any sense if it does not go forward with complete management flexibility in every possible way.

A press conference was held today in which some Members of this body were quoted as saying that those of us who believe as I have just described are union baiters; that our whole motive here is to bash organized labor; our whole motive here is to attack honest working people.

Let me take you back to my experience at the Department of Transportation. It was my first experience in an executive branch organization. I had served on Capitol Hill as a staffer, as a Government employee, but I had never been a civil servant. And I went in with some of the standard prejudices that many people in the private sector have about civil servants: That they don't work very hard; that they are just serving their time until their 40-year period for retirement comes along; that they are not very entrepreneurial; that they are not interested in new ideas; that they take as their motto, "We were here before you got here, and we will be here after you leave, so we don't need to pay any attention to you."

There were some who had that view, there is no question. There is a very small percentage of civil servants who feel that way.

I was overwhelmed with admiration for the career civil service people in our Government who were dedicated, determined to make Government work, absolutely determined to do the very best job they could, and open to suggestions and comments that may have come from the political appointees.

We had an Assistant Secretary for Administration, a position that is a civil-service-protected position, who had been appointed by Alan Boyd. He was a known Democrat. But because his position had civil service protection, there was not anything that Secretary Volpe could do about it. He was as helpful to me in this reorganization effort that I have just described as anybody at the Department.

He sat down with me and helped take me through the labyrinth of Federal regulations. And when I made some mistakes—and I made several which were beauts—he did not jump all over me. He said: It's our fault for not having warned you in advance that that's what would happen if you did it that way. And if we had been there, we would have helped you do it another way. And let's see to it that it happens the other way.

These people do not need to be protected from competent managers. These people need to be motivated and excited about the creation of a new Department. If the new Department is being created with intelligent management and flexibility on the part of the management, the civil servants will respond, certainly those at the Department of Transportation. They will respond with enthusiasm: At least we are moving forward in an area where we have been deficient in the past. Thank you for the opportunity for this new kind of service that the old paradigm would not allow.

They will be supportive of this. Maybe their union managers are fearful of what management might do, but get a competent manager in as the Secretary and have him or her choose competent people as the Assistant Secretaries and the other administrators, give them the flexibility to do the right management thing, and the civil servants will not feel attacked. They will not feel under siege. They will feel liberated and excited. And they will be part of the solution because if this Department is going to work in 3 years rather than 5, it has to have the support of the civil servants; it has to have the kind of partnership between the civil servants and the political leadership that America has seen happen so often in so many other places.

So I reject the notion that my call for management flexibility is somehow an attack on the civil servants or an attack on their unions. Instead, it is reaching out and saying: Join with us to make the best kind of Department we possibly can and, thus, create for you the best working environment you can ever be in in your Federal career. Be part of something truly exciting, something truly significant and historic, the creation of a new Department in the 21st century dealing with 21st century challenges that this country has not had to face in its past history.

But don't let us start out with a traditional 19th-century-style management-labor confrontation. Do not let us start out with: We have to protect our turf and everything we have now, and we have absolutely no confidence at all that the management will do anything but attack us.

Let's put all of that aside and say: What are we dealing with here? As I say, we are dealing with a 21st century challenge of the kind this country has not faced in its history. We are trying to reorganize the assets of the Government to meet this challenge in a cohesive, coherent, intelligent way.

Let us never lose sight of that objective and keep our eye on that ball as we write this legislation and as we adopt amendments on the floor.

One of the first amendments that will be offered will be one to give the Secretary, through the President, the kind of management flexibility I have been talking about. I intend to support that as strongly as I know how, for all of the reasons I have laid out here.

I hope my colleagues will join with me.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I would like to speak on behalf of the homeland security agency bill.

It is with humble appreciation of the gravity of the task now before us that I rise to advocate the creation of the Department of Homeland Security.

Today, almost a full year since the forces of hatred attacked the American homeland, we are poised to transform the Federal Government into a sharper, more versatile instrument of peace and security for all of our citizens. The people of America and their leaders here in Washington, in both Chambers of the Congress, on both sides of the aisle, and at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue, are united on the substance of this issue.

All agree we cannot stand idly by as the enemies of freedom plot our destruction. All agree that the homeland security apparatus of the Government is at present ill equipped for its grave task. And all agree that we are called, therefore, to take decisive action to retrofit the Federal Government for the more effective performance of its greatest commission—the protection of its citizens.

Thomas Jefferson once said the real goal of government is the protection of life and not its destruction. When Senators LIEBERMAN and SPECTER introduced legislation establishing a Department of Homeland Security in May, I am proud to say I was one of four Senators to sign on as an original cosponsor.

Since that time, we all now know, the administration, followed by every Member of Congress, has joined us in this critical reform effort, so that we find ourselves standing now on the threshold of an historic bipartisan achievement. A few points of difference on the details do remain. I look forward to a full and healthy debate on these over the next few days. But by and large, we are headed in the same direction, toward the same ultimate destination—the protection of our Nation.

I have no doubt that we will get there together. As my good friend Congressman JOHN LEWIS said after September 11:

We may have come to this country aboard different ships, but we are all in the same boat now.

How true that is.

Under Senator LIEBERMAN's leadership, the Governmental Affairs Committee, upon which I sit, has outlined in its bipartisan homeland security legislation a blueprint for a robust new Department that hews closely in most key respects to that envisioned by the President. The committee's measure would construct the Department around the core missions already identified by the President: Critical infrastructure protection, border and transportation protection, emergency preparedness and response, and science and technology.

With few exceptions, the existing agencies transferred to the new Department under the administration's proposal are the same as those transferred by the committee's bill. Often where the committee has diverged from what the administration has done, as in the case of the transfer of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in Brunswick, GA, to the new Department, the change has been made in close consultation with, and with the approval of, the administration. In other cases, changes are merely a fleshing out of proposals and concepts previously set forth by the administration.

Among the latter are two amendments I offered during markup of this legislation that pertain to the Federal response to terrorism of a biological nature. The administration's proposal laid a strong foundation by recognizing that public health agencies, such as the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the CDC, in Atlanta are absolutely central to an effective response to biological terrorism and by further recognizing that prudence requires that scientists who focus on bioterrorism not be separated from the vast expertise and resources of the rest of the public health sector.

My amendments, which the committee adopted during the July markup, are efforts to use the lessons of last fall's anthrax crisis culled from hours of testimony before our Governmental Affairs Committee to build on the solid foundation the President and HHS Secretary Thompson have set.

The inadequacy of our bioterrorism preparedness and response capability was exposed in dramatic and painful fashion last fall. In reaction, the Governmental Affairs Committee, under the distinguished leadership of Chairman LIEBERMAN and Senator THOMPSON, held a series of hearings investigating the roots and potential remedies of that inadequacy.

At a hearing convened at my request on April 18 this year, Secretary of Health and Human Services Tommy Thompson, buttressed by a panel of experts who followed him, testified to the following unmet needs in our Federal counterbioterrorism efforts:

First, a reorganization of the CDC's Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Program, much like on a smaller scale what we are now doing with the Federal Government at large.

Second, clearer protocols of communication and coordination between public health and law enforcement officials.

And third, a greater commitment of resources to the CDC.

These recommendations comprise the three-point approach for filling in the gaps in our national bioterrorism defenses that I have been advocating for some months now. I am pleased that two of these largely have been incorporated into the bill we are now considering.

With respect to the first, I proposed, and the committee adopted, an amendment to create in the CDC a Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division. Why a division, Mr. President? Because that division answers directly to the head of the CDC. It is an entity located at the intersection of science and security, of public health and law enforcement, empowered to respond with speed and with a firm grounding in the science of biological warfare to the infectious terror some might seek to unleash upon this great Nation. The CDC's existing Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Program is a relatively new initiative at the agency, having been created only in 1999 with a handful of personnel, little status within the agency, and meager funding.

The program remains as a subsidiary of the National Center for Infectious Diseases, a sub-branch of a sub-branch. It should come as little surprise then that the many witnesses who testified before our committee about last fall's crisis depicted a Federal response that was fragmented, confused, and largely inadequate.

CDC officials, both within and without the bioterrorism program, responded commendably, but their ability to do so was clearly constrained by, among other factors, an organizational structure that led inadequate focus to the unique aspects of a manmade threat to the public health.

The Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division, as described in this chart, will remedy that. Operating directly out of the Office of the Director of the CDC, the division will lead and coordinate the agency's counterbioterrorism activities. It will train and employ a cadre of public health professionals whose specialized training and focus is on bioterrorism, and it will serve as a nexus, a meeting ground, between the realms of public health and security, including homeland security and law enforcement.

There is a real need in the Federal Government for expertise in the intersection of health and security. Terrorists, as a matter of fact, hit the seam. They went right between the two. Officials thinking exclusively along either law enforcement or public health lines, as is too often the case under the current structure, will inevitably overlook key bits of information that are not fully appreciable, except by individuals with expertise in both areas.

In the case of bioterrorism—the word itself a fusing of health, bio, and security, terrorism—appreciating such bits of information and drawing critical conclusions based on these are absolutely essential to an effective Federal response. The cadre of bioterrorism specialists developed by the Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division would be specially trained accordingly.

In addition, while the threat posed by bioterrorism bears a strong resemblance to that posed by conventional disease outbreaks, there are real substantive differences between a manmade disease outbreak—a la the anthrax attack through envelopes that were obviously mailed by a human being—and a naturally occurring one—West Nile virus, Ebola virus, and the like. Our health officials are highly trained to cope with the latter, but most lack a sophisticated appreciation of the different considerations that attend a manmade attack.

The upshot is when a recognition of these different divergences can make a difference between effective and ineffective emergency response. For example, while epidemiologists knew that contracting inhalation anthrax naturally required exposure to between 5,000 to 10,000 spores, they failed in the early stages of the crisis to consider the ways in which the deliberate weaponization of anthrax, with a substance such as silica, might alter the level of exposure required for lethality. Consequently, two Postal Service workers died.

They are not to be criticized. They are scientists, after all, not criminal investigators. However, had bioterrorism specialists with training in both medicine and criminal behavior been on the case last fall, their unique expertise might have led to conclusions that in the hands of decisionmakers might have made a difference in recommendations and courses of action.

In academia, there is a growing recognition that the study of bioterrorism, though it shares much with the fields of public health and counterterrorism, is a distinct discipline. To cite just a few leading examples in the world of academia, Mr. President, Johns Hopkins University has established the Center for Civilian Biodefense Strategies; St. Louis University's School of Public Health has a Center for the Study of Bioterrorism; and the University of Texas medical branch has established a Center for Biodefense.

This bill will create in the Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division of the CDC a career track for the bioterrorism specialist, a place for graduates of programs such as these to put to use their unique expertise in the service of their country.

The chart behind me describes the organization of the counterbioterrorism efforts of the Federal Government with the establishment of the Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division and a Department of Homeland Security, as under the bill we are considering.

The second part of my plan for improving our bioterrorism defenses is contained in an amendment also adopted by the committee in the July markup that mandates that law enforcement, homeland security, and public health personnel keep each other fully and currently informed in the event of a bioterrorist attack.

One of the objectives of a Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Division of the CDC is to coordinate, cooperate, and communicate with other elements of the Federal Government that are involved in a biological attack on this country—Department of Homeland Security, law enforcement, Department of Justice, FBI, the Department of Health and Human Services, and State and local public health entities, all of which are in this boat together, Mr. President.

It was too frequently the case last fall that the different agencies with a role in the Federal response failed to communicate and coordinate with one another often or adequately enough. The requirement of full disclosure that will help put an end to that is upon us, but a significant part of the same problem relates to confusion in current law. Executive branch documents delineating the roles of law enforcement and public health agencies vis-a-vis one another say one thing while Federal statutes, most notably section 319 of the Public Health Service Act, say another.

In an effort to address this inconsistency, this legislation we are considering includes my amendment to direct the Secretary of Homeland Security to develop a Federal response plan that accords fully with the statutory authorities granted to the Secretary of Health and Human Services under the Public Health Service Act.

By so doing, this bill will mitigate in future crises a good bit of the confusion that prevailed last time. As we debate this legislation, I will offer an additional amendment to provide further clarity with respect to the roles of public health, law enforcement, and homeland security in the event of a bioterrorist attack. This amendment will provide the Secretary of Health and Human Services with the authority and flexibility he needs to carry out the responsibilities of the public health sector in the Federal response to bioterrorism.

Specifically, the amendment provides that no Federal agency may supersede the authority of the public health agencies to respond to a public health emergency in whatever manner is appropriate and necessary.

Last fall, public health authorities were at times muzzled, overridden, and generally kept out of the loop by law enforcement agencies. Each was doing its own thing, so to speak. Therein lies the problem. The problem arises because public health and law enforcement agencies both have essential roles to play in the event of an attack of terrorism that is also a threat to the public health. These roles are distinct but sometimes overlap. While both are vital, in the event of a terrorist-caused public health emergency, the unique life-and-death ramifications of such an attack mandate, in my view, that public health experts take the lead role in investigating and treating the attack. The amendment I will offer would give public health officials the authority and flexibility they need to do just that.

The third point of my bioterrorism response plan calls for providing the public health agencies that will play the central role in preparing for and responding to bioterrorism with the resources they need to do the job. We have to put our money where our mouth is—in this case, our money where our mission is, and our mission is to defend this Nation.

I commend the administration for proposing an unprecedented $4.3 billion for HHS's bioterrorism initiative in the next fiscal year, a 45-percent increase over the current year's funding level. These funds are badly needed. However, within this considerable request there is significant oversight. The administration has proposed actually a reduction in funds for revitalizing and securing the CDC's dilapidated, World War II-era facilities in Atlanta by $186 million in the next fiscal year, a draconian cut of nearly two-thirds. That does not comport with putting our money where our mission is of defending this Nation.

As the chart behind me demonstrates, since fiscal year 2000 when Congress first got on board with the CDC's master plan, the revitalization of its ramshackle facilities, the budget for building facilities and security has steadily increased each year. I have been proud to be part of this increase. This increase accompanied a recognition on the part of Congress, especially the Senate, and made more acute in the aftermath of the anthrax crisis, that if the CDC is able to protect us all against the new, more insidious threats to the public health we now face, the agency must be equipped with adequate modern facilities and its labs must be fortified against potential terrorist designs.

The needed funds will not, of course, be appropriated through the legislation we are considering today, but I urge my colleagues to keep in mind, when the Labor-HHS appropriations bill reaches the floor, that the steps we are taking to combat bioterrorism in this legislation will require an adequate commitment of resources if they are to be effective.

In summary, the public health-related provisions of the Governmental Affairs Committee bill that were added during the markup of this bill are, in my view, perfectly aligned with the administration's approach and goals. While they are not contained in the administration's original proposal, they are really extensions on concepts contained therein.

On a separate but related matter, however, I must respectfully disagree with the approach contained in both the committee's and the administration's proposals. The legislation before us would transfer the strategic national stockpile—that is the vaccines that are strategically placed around America in secret locations known as the strategic national stockpile—from the CDC, where it has been successfully operated since its creation in 1999, to the Department of Homeland Security. I have serious reservations about the proposed transfer. Accordingly, I am continuing to work on a bipartisan basis with the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Chairman LIEBERMAN, the administration, and others, on an attempt to preserve the role of the CDC in the operation of the stockpile.

The stockpile is collectively 12 secret stashes of vaccines, medicines, and other medical supplies placed in strategic locations around the country, deliverable in a few short hours to any location in the country should the need for massive quantities of emergency medicines arise. Decisions related to deploying the medicines in the stockpile, what medicines to administer, who should receive medicines, what medicines should be in the stockpile, are essentially medical questions. They should, as such, be made by public medical professionals based on public health considerations. This is the reason, in point of fact, that the stockpile was assigned to the CDC in the first place.

The committee's bill would transfer final authority over the stockpile to the new department while leaving some operational responsibility with the CDC. I am afraid we are borrowing from Peter to pay Paul. Leaving aside the problems inherently associated with separating operational responsibility from accountability, this approach, while retaining some stockpile functions with the CDC, would undermine the most important reason to have the CDC involved at all; that is, to bring to bear the necessary expertise in making final decisions regarding the use of the stockpile.

If there were a core public health competency in the new department that could supervise the stockpile, then the reasons cited by the proponents of the transfer—primarily a desire to consolidate all emergency response functions in the new department—might be sufficient to justify the move. However, the public health expertise of the Federal Government was, by and large—correctly, in my view—left where it currently resides because of the important synergies, the command, control, cooperation, and communication, that would be lost if certain public health professionals were to be segregated from their colleagues in other public health sectors.

There is, consequently, no core public health competency in the new department. There is no assistant secretary for health, as some have proposed.

An interest in the effective administration of the stockpile demands then that it remain in the hands of those who do have public health expertise. The CDC has handled the stockpile effectively to date, coordinating smoothly its deployment on September 11 and during the anthrax crisis with FEMA and other emergency responders.

We should follow the old dictum that if it ain't broke, don't fix it. Whatever the Senate's final decision on this matter, however, let me reiterate I am fully on board with the President and his team on homeland security. We are all in the same boat. We cannot, we will not, stand by idly while those who hate us plot our demise. The fundamental reorganization of our homeland security apparatus is the surest step we can take now to gird ourselves for the threats to come. With sober understanding of the moment of the task now at hand, let us complete this good work.

Above the pyramid on the Great Seal of the United States, in reference to the founding of our Nation, it says, in Latin, "God has favored our undertaking." May He grant us now His favor again.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. It is my understanding that the matter before the Senate is the Smith amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

AMENDMENT NO. 4492 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4491

(Purpose: To amend title 49, United States Code to improve flight and cabin security on passenger aircraft)

Mr. REID. I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators BOXER and SMITH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, for himself, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. BURNS, Mr. BUNNING, and Mr. MILLER, proposes an amendment numbered 4492 to amendment No. 4491.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before my friend from Georgia leaves—and I know the Senator from Vermont wishes to speak—I want to emphasize how important the Centers for Disease Control are to this country and to the world. I have traveled with the Senator from Georgia to the Centers for Disease Control and seen some of those old, dilapidated buildings, some of them built prior to World War II.

We should allow the Centers for Disease Control to have a space where they can work with some degree of quality. They are spread out all over the campus, and they need to be brought into one central location. That is what is being attempted.

I say to my friend, this entity was established many years ago to fight malaria in the southern part of the United States. After we whipped malaria, they had such a presence that we used them for a public health entity in this country. They have done remarkable work, and not only in America. I had the pleasure of traveling and representing this country on the continent of Africa during the August break. The Centers for Disease Control has spread throughout that continent. It is money that the taxpayers should be proud is being spent. Each day that goes by, because of the Centers for Disease Control, lives are being saved from mosquito-related problems and, of course, AIDS.

The Senator from Georgia has a tremendous responsibility to convey to the rest of the Senate the importance of the Centers for Disease Control and make sure they have adequate resources to do the job that is necessary to be done, especially post-September 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to express my concerns about a central component of the proposed Department of Homeland Security—the inclusion of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in the new department.

I understand that in the wake of the horrific events of September 11, we would look for ways to strengthen our Nation's defense to prevent any future catastrophe. I fully support that goal. But we must be cautious, very cautious, to make sure that we work to correct what went wrong and not interfere with what went right.

We know what went wrong, and I firmly hope that we, as a nation, will develop a comprehensive plan to address the shortcomings in our intelligence gathering and communication efforts. That, I believe, should be the prime goal of any new homeland defense effort.

What went right after September 11 was the response of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. In the days after the September 11 terrorist attacks I visited the Pentagon and World Trade Center. I saw firsthand how well FEMA responded to a horrific scene that all of the disaster drills and training exercises could not have prepared anyone for. I was incredibly impressed by what I saw. Thousands of workers from around the country came together to bring calm and order to an otherwise chaotic situation.

Of nearly 400 disasters that FEMA has responded to since the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995, only the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were acts of terrorism. Through the coordination of FEMA's director, the agency demonstrated that it was capable of responding in such cases, and responding well.

Yet things have not always gone so smoothly with the Agency. We need only to look back to the 1980s, when FEMA's focus shifted to civil defense and left the Agency ill-prepared to respond to natural disasters. In 1985, after a tornado killed 65 people in Pennsylvania, FEMA's poor response prompted then-Congressman Tom Ridge to play a central role in efforts to refocus the Agency's mission on victims of natural disasters.

But it took time. After seeing the bungled responses to Hurricane Hugo in 1989 and Hurricane Andrew in 1992, my friend from South Carolina, Senator HOLLINGS summed up FEMA's performance by saying, "A major hurricane is not one disaster, but two: The natural disaster of the hurricane itself, and the unnatural disaster of Federal efforts to aid the victims."

Over the last decade, with help from Congress and new leadership, FEMA has worked hard to regain the trust of its constituents, especially those Americans affected by a major disaster. Now we must maintain FEMA's independence to ensure that an increased emphasis on terrorism will be in addition to, and not at the expense of, the Agency's natural hazard programs.

As it now stands, FEMA is a small, flexible agency with a director reporting directly to the President. This chain of command works well, but it would be lost if FEMA were moved into the Department of Homeland Security. Adding another layer of bureaucracy to the disaster declaration process can only slow vital response and recovery efforts.

Again, I firmly believe that it is critical to prepare America to respond to terrorist acts, but we must not lose sight of the fact that FEMA's primary focus is to respond to nature's fury. We know that fires, floods, tornadoes, earthquakes, and hurricanes will continue to cause injuries, deaths, and property damage every year.

Jeopardizing FEMA's abilities to deal with disasters is not the best way to secure our homeland.

As we move forward, we should be thoughtful and deliberate, and we should focus on fixing the failures and not tinkering with the successes.

Accordingly, at the appropriate time I will offer an amendment to remove the Federal Emergency Management Agency from the Department of Homeland Security. Preserving FEMA's independence is the best way to prepare our nation to respond to natural disasters and any future terrorist attacks we may face.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEFFORDS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TOM BURNETT, JR.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to an American hero, Tom Burnett, Jr., who was a beloved husband and father and adored son and a very able business leader. He was a person who would not and did not sit quietly as terrorists carried out their plan last year on September 11.

Along with my colleague, Senator DAYTON, and with our colleague JIM RAMSTAD on the House side, we introduced legislation to designate a U.S. Postal Service facility in Bloomington, MN, as the Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building.

This legislation today is passing the House, and my expectation is that by the end of the day this will also pass the Senate. I don't know that there would ever be any Senator would disagree with this.

Tom Burnett, Jr. grew up in Bloomington, MN, and he was aboard flight 93 on September 11 of last year. America owes Tom Burnett a deep debt of gratitude for his bravery on that day. It is possible that Members of the Congress, including myself, could very well owe him our own lives. We will never know for sure.

Tom is believed by investigators to have been among those passengers who kept the hijackers from crashing flight 93 into a national landmark, most likely the White House or the Capitol. That, of course, would have likely resulted in many more deaths than already occurred on that day, and instead, as we all know, flight 93 crashed into a Pennsylvania field. After listening to a tape from the flight's black box, law enforcement officials have described a desperate struggle aboard the plane.

As FBI Director Mueller said after being briefed on the contents of the tape:

We believe that those passengers were absolute heroes, and their actions during this flight were heroic.

Tom Burnett, Jr. was 38 years old when he died. A 1986 graduate of Carlson School of Management at the University of Minnesota and a member of the Alpha Cappa Psi Fraternity, he had shown selfless leadership before. When he was quarterback of Thomas Jefferson High School in Bloomington, Tom's inspired play led his team to a conference championship game in 1990. He was a successful business leader as chief operating officer for a medical device manufacturer in California.

We will never forget his ultimate sacrifice and the ultimate sacrifice of many other heroes as well on September 11. Our thoughts and prayers today are with Tom's family: His wife Deena, and their daughters, Madison, Halley, and Anna-Clair, three little daughters; his parents, Thomas, Sr. and Beverly—I had a chance to talk to Bev just the other day—and his sisters, Martha O'Brien and Mary Margaret Burnett.

Bloomington will be very proud to have this post office named for Tom Burnett, Jr. We are all very proud of this son of Minnesota.

Again, I thank Congressman RAMSTAD for his leadership in the House. I know this bill is going to pass the House today, and my expectation is that it will pass the Senate as well.

I thank again Senator LIEBERMAN for his help in expediting this and making this happen. I know for a fact this is really very important to Tom's family and to all of Minnesota.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred July 29, 2000 in Mahwah, NJ. A man attacked two gay men after leaving an apartment complex party. The assailant confronted the two partygoers in the apartment parking lot, made obscene remarks about their sexual orientation, and then punched and kicked them. One of the victims had to be treated at a local hospital.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

THE ELEVENTH OF SEPTEMBER

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, over the last year, Roger J. Robicheau, of Holbrook, MA, has taken the time to share with me many of his poems that were inspired by the events of September 11 and our country's efforts to heal the wounds of that day. His eloquence has captured the heroes who sacrificed so much for so many, has lifted my spirits throughout the year and has offered insightful perspective on that tragic day. I ask that his latest poem, "The Eleventh of September," be printed in the RECORD so that my colleagues and my fellow Americans can share in his thoughts and prayers for our country.

THE ELEVENTH OF SEPTEMBER

We mourn their loss this day this year

Those now with God, no danger near
So many loved ones left do stand
Confronting loss throughout our land
My heart goes out to those who do
No one can fathom what they view
I firmly pray for peace of mind
Dear God please help each one to find
And to our soldiers now at war
God guide above, at sea, on shore
They are the best, I have no doubt
Our country's pride, complete, devout
The finest force you'll ever see
All freedom grown through liberty
One final thought comes clear to me
For what must live in infamy
Absolutely—We'll Remember
The Eleventh—of September

IN MEMORIAM: CAPTAIN CHARLES BURLINGAME, III

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to share with the Senate the memory of one of my constituents, Captain Charles F. Burlingame, III, who lost his life on September 11, 2001. Captain Burlingame was 51 years old when the flight he was piloting, American Airlines Flight 77, was overtaken and hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed into the Pentagon, killing everyone on board.

Charles Burlingame was known as "Chic" his entire life by family and friends. He was born in St. Paul, MN, and grew up in Anaheim, CA. Chic was an Eagle Scout and played trumpet in his high school marching band. After graduating from Anaheim High School in 1967, President Lyndon Johnson appointed him to the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, MD.

He continued developing his musical talents and played bugle in the Naval Academy Drum and Bugle Corps. After graduating from the Naval Academy in 1971, he attended Naval air training at Pensacola, FL and then enrolled at the advanced tactical school at Meridian, MS, and Corpus Christi, TX. He flew F-4 Phantom jets as a carrier-based pilot aboard the U.S.S. Saratoga.

In 1979 Captain Burlingame was honorably discharged from active duty and became a member of the Naval Reserves. During the Gulf War he served at the Pentagon under the Assistant Secretary of Defense and was awarded the Defense Superior Service Medal. Later, as a pilot for American Airlines he flew domestic and international flights.

At his eulogy, Navy Vice-Admiral Timothy Keating described Captain Burlingame as "a gifted aviator who could make jets talk." Senator George Allen of Virginia eulogized him as a man who "gave his last breath in a struggle against terrorism. He was a true American patriot who paid the ultimate sacrifice as one of our Nation's first warriors to perish in the war on terrorism." Perhaps Chic Burlingame's attitude toward life is best summed up by a statement he wrote in a classmate's high school yearbook when Chic was about to graduate, "Remember, desire and hard work equal victory!" Chic believed that one person really can make a difference.

Captain Burlingame is survived by his wife, Sheri G. Harris Burlingame, his daughter, Wendy D. Pattavina, his grandson, Jack Pattavina, step-sons John Harris and Chad Harris, brothers Mark M. Burlingame and Bradley M. Burlingame and sister Debra A. Burlingame.

None of us is untouched by the terror of September 11th, and many Californians were part of each tragic moment of that tragic day. Some were trapped in the World Trade Center towers. Some were at work in the Pentagon. And the fates of some were sealed as they boarded planes bound for San Francisco or Los Angeles.

I offer today this tribute to one of 51 Californians who perished on that awful morning. I want to assure the family of Charles Burlingame, and the families of all the victims, that their fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, aunts, uncles, brothers and sisters will not be forgotten.

LAUREN GRANDCOLAS: IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to share with the Senate the memory of one of my constituents, Lauren Grandcolas, of San Rafael, CA, who lost her life on September 11, 2001. Mrs. Grandcolas was a 38-year-old advertising sales consultant when the flight she was on, United Airlines Flight 93, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed in a Pennsylvania field, killing everyone on board.

Mrs. Grandcolas was born in Bloomington, IN and attended the University of Texas at Austin, where she met her husband, Jack Grandcolas. After graduation, she worked as a Marketing Director for a law firm and then for Price, Waterhouse, Coopers. At the time of her tragic death, Mrs. Grandcolas was working as an advertising sales consultant at Good Housekeeping Magazine and was researching and writing a non-fiction book to help women boost their self-esteem.

Lauren had enthusiasm and passion for life, loved the outdoors and was devoted to physical fitness. She hiked, jogged, kayaked, and enjoyed in-line skating around her neighborhood. Her energy was boundless and she took classes in cooking, gardening, scuba-diving and wine appreciation. Lauren was also active with United Way, March of Dimes, Project Open Hand, Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, Breast Cancer Awareness and Glide Memorial.

Her husband Jack recalls she had a heart the size of Texas. Knowing her flight had been hijacked, Lauren left her husband a message on their home answering machine and then loaned her cell phone to another passenger to call loved ones.

The joy Lauren felt pursuing new interests and developing new skills was being interwoven in the book she was writing for women. Jack recalls, "She made a point to do things that were good for her, and she thought she could extend what she'd learned to help other adult women gain confidence. Her sister and I will fulfill her dream by completing the book."

None of us is untouched by the terror of September 11th, and many Californians were part of each tragic moment of that tragic day. Some were trapped in the World Trade Center towers. Some were at work in the Pentagon. And the fates of some were sealed as they boarded planes bound for San Francisco or Los Angeles.

I offer today this tribute to one of the 51 Californians who perished on that awful morning. I want to assure the family of Lauren Grandcolas, and the families of all the victims, that their fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, aunts, uncles, brothers and sisters will not be forgotten.

YEAR OF THE BLUES RESOLUTION

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, as you may know, I introduced legislation (S. Res. 316) on August 1, 2002, designating the year beginning February 1, 2003, as the "Year of the Blues" and requesting that the President issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the "Year of the Blues" with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and educational programs. I am proud to be joined by Senators COCHRAN, THOMPSON, and FRIST.

It has been said that "Blues is more than music; Blues is culture. Blues is America." As a native of Helena, Arkansas, I could not agree more. Growing up in the Delta, I often listened to the blues during the famous "King Biscuit Time" show on my hometown station, KFFA radio. The songs I heard often told stories of both celebration and triumph, as well as sorrow and struggle.

Although its roots are in the tradition of the primitive songs of the old Southern sharecroppers, the blues has left an important cultural legacy in our country and has documented African-American history in the last century. As the blues began to transform in style and content throughout the twentieth century, its evolution paralleled the migration of American life from a rural, agricultural society to an urban industrialized nation. The blues has also left an indelible impression on other forms of music with its influence heard in jazz, rock and roll, rhythm and blues, country, and even classical music. Despite these facts, though, many young people today do not understand the rich heritage of the blues or recognize its impact on our nation and our world.

That is why I am delighted to introduce this resolution and participate in the Year of the Blues project. Coordinated by The Blues Foundation and Experience Music Project, The Year of the Blues is a multi-faceted entertainment, education, and outreach program recently formed to both celebrate and create greater awareness for the blues and its place in the history and evolution of music and culture, both in the United States and around the world. The program is anchored by high profile events, and beginning next year, it will feature a wide array of participants, projects, and components designed to reach a large audience, as well as support blues oriented education and outreach programs, such as Blues in the Schools.

This project also takes on a special meaning for me because I am a "daughter of the Delta," and my hometown of Helena has played a large role in the development of the blues. Today, Helena serves as a temporary blues Mecca each October when the three day King Biscuit Blues Festival takes place. And as I noted earlier, it is also the site of one of the longest running daily music shows, "King Biscuit Time," which continues to air every weekday at 12:15 pm on KFFA radio from the Delta Cultural Center Visitors' Center. As long as I can remember, "King Biscuit Time" originally featured famous harmonica player Sonny Boy Williamson, guitarist Robert Junior Lockwood, and the King Biscuit Entertainers. When recently noting the uniqueness of the show, long-time host "Sunshine" Sonny Payne recalled that many of the songs played on "King Biscuit Time" originated during the live broadcasts, and in some cases, words to the songs were known to change day to day. After becoming involved with this project, I recently came across an article "Pass the biscuits, cause it's King Biscuit Time . . ." written by freelance writer Lex Gillespie. I believe this article provides an accurate account of the development of blues in the South.

I will ask unanimous consent it be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

So as you can see, Mr. President, the blues has been an important part of my life and the life of many others. It's a style of music that is, in its essence, truly American. But as we move into a new century and embrace new forms and styles of music, we must not allow today's youth to forget the legacy of our past. By teaching the blues, promoting the blues, and celebrating the blues, we can ensure that the rich culture and heritage of our forefathers will always live on. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

At this time I ask unanimous consent that the Gillespie article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

“PASS THE BISCUITS, ‘CAUSE IT’S KING BISCUIT TIME...”

(By Lex Gillespie)

Ever since it hit the airwaves one lunchtime fifty-six years ago this November, “King Biscuit Time” has profoundly influenced the development and popularity of the blues. As the oldest and longest-running blues program on the radio, it helped promote the careers of bluesmen who pioneered this musical style and later brought it from street corners and juke joints in the South to an international audience. And today, KFFA and Helena are even “must see” stops for Japanese and European tourists who want to learn about the cultural roots of the blues.

“First things first,” recalls Sonny “Sunshine” Payne, the program’s host for over eleven thousand broadcasts: King Biscuit Time started when guitarist Robert Junior Lockwood and harmonica player Sonny Boy Williamson were told they would have to get a sponsor to get on the air.” That was 1941, when Payne was a teenager cleaning 78 rpm’s and running errands at KFFA. “They came to the station one day and I showed them in to station manager Sam Anderson . . . he sent them over to the Interstate Grocery Company and its owner Max Moore who had a flour called “King Biscuit Flour. . .”

Lockwood and Williamson became the show’s original King Biscuit Entertainers who advertised flour and corn meal in Helena and the surrounding Delta region; and after a lucky break, Sonny Payne took over as program host when the announcer lost his script while on the air. The program was a smash hit, thanks mostly to the playing and on-air presence of harp player Williamson. He became so popular that the sponsor named its product “Sonny Boy Corn Meal” and he was, and still is, pictured, smiling and with his harmonica, on a burlap sack of his own brand of meal.

Williamson was a musical pioneer in his own right. He was one of the first to make the harmonica the centerpiece in a blues band. His unique phrasings, compared by many to the human voice, influenced countless harp players.

His partner, Robert Junior Lockwood, stepson of the legendary Robert Johnson, also influenced this blues style. A fan of big band jazz, he incorporated jazzier elements into the blues, often playing the guitar with his fingers.

As years passed, the duo expanded into a full band, including piano player “Pine Top” Perkins, Houston Stackhouse an “Peck” Curtis, and musicians who played on the show also advertised local appearances that gave them more work.

With the success of “King Biscuit Time,” Helena soon became a center for the blues. It was a key stopping off point for black musicians on the trip north to the barrooms and clubs of Chicago’s South and West sides. Already, in the thirties, the town had seen the likes of pianist Memphis Slim and Helena native Roosevelt Sykes, as well as guitarists Howlin’ Wolf, Honeyboy Edwards, and Elmore James. And when the program went on the air, it helped shape the early careers of many an aspiring musician. “Little Walter” Jacobs and Jimmy Rogers, who later played with Muddy Waters, came to live and learn in Helena in the mid-1940’s. Muddy Waters also brought his band to Helena to play on KFFA and in bars in the area. Teenager Ike Turner first heard the blues on KFFA around that time, and King Biscuit pianist “Pine Top” Perkins gave him lessons in his trademark boogie woogie style.

The program also influenced other stations to put the blues on the radio. Its initial popularity convinced advertisers that the blues and commercial potential. “It was a major breakthrough,” explains folklorist Bill Ferris, director of the Center for the Study of Southern Culture at Ole Miss; “King Biscuit Time was a discovery of an audience and a market...that hitherto radio had not really understood.” Across the Mississippi River from Helena, radio station WROX put the South’s first black deejay, Early Wright, on the air spinning blues and gospel records in 1947. Upriver in Memphis, station WDIA the next year became the first southern station with an all-black staff, including a young musician named Riley “B.B.” King, who got an early break as a deejay. And in Nashville in the late forties, station WLAC reached nearly half the country with its late-night blues and R&B shows. All of these programs and stations owe an enormous debt to “King Biscuit Time.”

And today, the legacy of the show continues, with blues programs heard on radio stations across the U.S., the recording of the many “King Biscuit Entertainers,” and the yearly King Biscuit festival in Helena celebrating the city’s cultural heritage and significant role in developing and promoting the blues.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONGRATULATING GLAXOSMITHKLINE

• Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I would like to congratulate GlaxoSmithKline, GSK, on achieving an important milestone in its work to eliminate lymphatic filariasis, LF. Last month, the pharmaceutical company produced the one hundred-millionth tablet of its drug albendazole for donation to LF patients, marking a significant step toward eradicating this devastating disease.

Lymphatic filariasis, commonly known as elephantiasis, is a disabling and disfiguring tropical disease caused by thread-like worms that live in the human lymphatic system. It mainly affects people in the tropical and subtropical areas of Africa, Asia, and the Americas. Approximately 120 million people are affected by LF, with more than one billion people at risk of infection.

In 1998, GlaxoSmithKline and the World Health Organization formed the Global Alliance to Eliminate LF. The goals of the Alliance are to interrupt transmission of LF, country by country, until LF has been eliminated as a public health problem. GSK supports the Alliance by donating its antiparasitic drug albendazole and by helping with initiatives for coalition-building, planning, training, and communications.

LF is one of the world’s leading causes of disability, affecting people in nearly 80 countries. The estimated economic loss through disability, illness, and missed work days is in the billions of dollars each year. By breaking the cycle of infection between mosquitoes and humans, the administration of albendazole is an important component of sparing the next generation from the deforming manifestations of LF.

GlaxoSmithKline maintains its U.S. headquarters in Philadelphia, and I am proud to represent the company’s 6,000 Pennsylvania employees searching for cures and treatments to improve the lives of citizens worldwide. I commend GSK for its dedication to the eradication of lymphatic filariasis and wish the company success in fulfilling its commitment to produce and donate 6 billion albendazole tablets to this end.●

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE PEDI- ATRIC CONVALESCENT CENTER

• Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, today I honor and congratulate the Home of the Innocents Pediatric Convalescent Center, PCC, in Louisville, KY. The PCC was recently recognized with the 2002 National Organization on Disability Award from the American Association of Homes and Services for the Aging, AAHSA. AAHSA is a national association representing mission-driven, not-for-profit health care and senior housing providers.

The PCC is truly a unique and special place for disabled children throughout the Commonwealth of Kentucky. In fact, according to the PCC, the center is Kentucky’s only center of excellence for children’s long-term nursing needs.

The PCC has served residents from 81 of the 120 counties in the Commonwealth of Kentucky as well as from the neighboring states of Indiana, Ohio, and Tennessee.

The PCC not only provides patients with medical care, but also offers their children an array of educational, social, and physical opportunities. The staff, ranging from speech therapists to dietitians, works around the clock, 365 days a year to ensure that children’s needs are tended to on a daily basis. They deserve special recognition for their hard work, indomitable spirit and pro-active approach to pediatric health care.

I ask that my fellow Senators join me in honoring all involved with the Pediatric Convalescent Center. President Bush named September a month of Service and the PCC embodies this credo. Special children need special care. At PCC, special is the only kind of care people know.●

HONORING DR. FRANK P. LLOYD SR.

• Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, today I honor the life of a fellow Hoosier, physician, civic leader and distinguished businessman, Dr. Frank P. Lloyd Sr., who passed away on August 27, 2002.

As those who knew Dr. Lloyd would attest, his strong commitment to the city of Indianapolis was reflected in his successful and distinguished career. Mr. Sam H. Jones, president of the Indianapolis Urban League referred to him as "a giant among men, not just African-American men, but a giant among men, period." State Representative William Crawford called Dr. Lloyd "a Renaissance Man who always provided an inspirational voice." And U.S. Congresswoman JULIA CARSON, who knew Dr. Lloyd for nearly 40 years, referred to her dear friend as "a man who went around doing so many beautiful and positive things in such a quiet way."

Dr. Lloyd worked for Methodist Hospital for 25 years, beginning as director of medical research and retiring as president. During his time at Methodist, the hospital became the first non-university hospital in the Nation to offer heart transplants and one of the very few to be approved for Jarvik-7 artificial heart implantation. He taught at Indiana University, Purdue University, and Howard University in Washington, D.C., where he authored several medical textbooks.

Without question, Dr. Lloyd was and will always be regarded as one of Indianapolis's most influential and dedicated civic leaders. He was the catalyst in various accomplishments, such as the creation of the White River State Park, the Indiana Sports Corporation and the Indianapolis Circle City Classic. His ability to build bridges between corporate America and the community were without equal.

Dr. Lloyd founded the former Midwest National Bank, where he was the Chairman of the Board and CEO. He was also the Chairman of the Midwest National Corporation and majority owner for a time of a local Indianapolis radio station, WTLG-FM.

In addition to his corporate success, Dr. Lloyd served on the boards of various civic and charitable organizations, including the Center for Legislative Improvement, Indiana Bell Telephone Co., Goodwill Industries Foundation of Central Indiana, Inc., United Way of Greater Indianapolis, CTS and the Urban League of Indianapolis.

Dr. Lloyd is survived by his children, Shelley Lloyd Hankinson, Dr. Frank P. Lloyd Jr., Dr. Riley P. Lloyd, and Karen Ann Lloyd Jenkins; a sister, Annie Jackson; and seven grandchildren. Dr. Frank P. Lloyd was a true leader and humanitarian that the city of Indianapolis, the State of Indiana, and the Nation will miss tremendously.

I commend the late Dr. Frank P. Lloyd Sr. for his lifelong service to our Nation.●

CONGRATULATIONS TO AIR FORCE SPACE COMMAND

● Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I wish to recognize the outstanding accomplishments of the men and women of Air Force Space Command, which celebrates the 20th anniversary of their creation this week. On September 1, 1982, the Air Force formally activated Space Command. This single event would forever change the way the United States fights and wins its wars.

Space Command originated as an operational command standing shoulder-to-shoulder with other Air Force operational commands such as the historic Strategic Air Command. Although the command was young, the visionary men and women of Space Command quickly stepped up to their immense task. These pioneers looked to the future and recognized the vast potential space-based systems could provide our nation.

In the two decades since Space Command was created, the Air Force's space programs have come a long way. In 1983, Space Command was given the responsibility for operating the Air Force's world wide network of surveillance and missile warning sensors. Also in the 1980's Space Command was given responsibility for command and control of its first two satellite constellations, the Defense Meteorological Satellite Program and the Defense Support Program. These satellite programs continue to be a crucial element of the nation's warfighting capability. The early nineties saw Air Force Space Command also take responsibility of all operational space lift vehicles, followed by the Minuteman and Peacekeeper ICBMs.

In the years leading up to Desert Storm, Air Force Space Command continued to expand its capabilities and enhance our Nation's warfighting forces. Desert Storm provided us the first glimpses of how space-based capabilities can transform the way we fight wars. The Defense Meteorological Satellite Program enabled planners to avoid adverse weather conditions and allowed General Schwarzkopf to successfully execute his now famous "Hail Mary" attack against the Iraqis by showing him where his tanks could effectively maneuver. The Defense Support Program was invaluable in providing early warning of SCUD launches. And the effectiveness of our bombing was just starting to see the improvements enabled by the Global Positioning System. On the first night of the war, Conventional Air-Launched Cruise Missiles descended on Baghdad with deadly accuracy after using Global Positioning System to update their own internal navigation.

Desert Storm gave us a preview of space-based capabilities, and in the years that followed the innovative men and women of Air Force Space Command continued to refine these capabilities and experiment with the best way to employ them. Operation Enduring Freedom showed the fruits of their hard effort. Communications and GPS satellites enabled the tremendous feat of a B-52 providing close air support to a soldier on the ground within minutes of the soldier calling in a target.

Today Air Force Space Command is a unique command within the Air Force, responsible for both acquisition and operation of Air Force satellite systems, launch vehicles, and missiles with over 30,000 people stationed around the globe. The role of Air Force Space Command is continuing to grow as they develop even more sophisticated systems such as SBIRS, the Space Based Radar, and advanced communication satellites, while expanding into areas such as space control. I congratulate Air Force Space Command on a very successful 20 years and wish them the very best for the next twenty.●

REPORT CONCERNING THE JUSTIFICATION OF THE AUSTRALIA GROUP AND THE CONVENTION ON THE PROHIBITION OF THE DEVELOPMENT, PRODUCTION, STOCKPILING AND USE OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS AND ON THEIR DESTRUCTION—PM 106

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

Consistent with the resolution of advice and consent to ratification of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by the Senate of the United States on April 24, 1997, I hereby certify pursuant to Condition 7(C)(i), Effectiveness of the Australia Group, that:

Australia Group members continue to maintain equally effective or more comprehensive controls over the export of: toxic chemicals and their precursors; dual-use processing equipment; human, animal, and plant pathogens and toxins with potential biological weapons applications; and dual-use biological equipment, as that afforded by the Australia Group as of April 25, 1997; and

The Australia Group remains a viable mechanism for limiting the spread of chemical and biological weapons-related materials and technology, and the effectiveness of the Australia Group has not been undermined by changes in membership, lack of compliance with common export controls and nonproliferation measures, or the weakening of common controls and nonproliferation measures, in force as of April 25, 1997.

The factors underlying this certification are described in the enclosed statement of justification.

GEORGE W. BUSH.

Science Foundation that will help achieve that goal.

Under the authority of the No Child Left Behind Act, NCLBA, the Department of Education is authorized to implement a Mathematics and Science Partnership Program, a program I am very interested in making sure is a success. That program is designed to improve the academic achievement of students in the areas of math and science. It will encourage States, universities, school districts and schools to work together to: 1. improve the status of math and science teaching and 2. develop more rigorous math and science curricula.

The NCLBA authorized $450 million for Fiscal Year 2002 for this program, but only $12.5 million was appropriated for 2002. That level of funding is a huge disappointment to me, and I believe it is a mistake. However, last year, NSG initiated its own Program at a level of $160 million. Because the bulk of the funding for the Math and Science program is at NSF, I believe it is appropriate, even necessary, to authorize the MSP Program at NSF as well.

This is not the preferred choice. I would prefer that we fund the program at the Department of Education. In the meantime, this bill will give us an opportunity to re-assert how important this program is.

As we all know, the No Child Left Behind Act requires that schools be determined as failing based in part on their math scores. If they are failing, there will be consequences, such as public school choice, supplemental services and eventual reorganization. That means that math teaching and math curriculum are more important than ever. And, by 2007, science assessments will be added to the mix.

So I want to be sure that we are getting these funds to our neediest schools. I worry that without more descriptive language, NSF will not focus on awarding grants to those that need it the most. I also worry that the Math and Science Partnership program is not getting the funding it needs. Reading, math's counterpart on the yearly tests, receives over $1 billion in funding. Any many other programs authorized in the No Child Left Behind Act are receiving appropriations that meet, or even exceed the authorization levels.

Not the Math and Science program. Despite the importance of math and the fact that schools will be determined as failing based on their math scores, the Math and Science Partnership Program is received a total of only $172.5 million in 2002, with only $12.5 million of those funds targeted to those based on need. $160 million from NSF and $12.5 million from the Department of Education. For 2003, the Senate Appropriations Committee recommends that only $120 million be provided for the MSP program. Why? Apparently, some $30 million in funds is left over from last year's appropriation because NSF did not believe the applications met the rigors the grant program requires.

I am very concerned that we are leaving States, schools districts, schools and students confused and bewildered due to the complicated bureaucratic process that has been created. I believe we should make sure that every dollar of the math and science partnership program money is appropriately administered to ensure results. I also believe that we should work toward appropriately funding this initiative. My amendment will accomplish those two goals.

My bill would insert the exact Math and Science Partnership language from the No Child Left Behind Act, language which we members of the HELP Committee have already agreed to, with only minor changes. That language requires targeting of the $450 million in funds to those who need it the most, and it also requires accountability.

I have also added a section requiring the NSF to provide technical assistance to those eligible applicants that request it. If the quality of the applications is not high, the NSF should help applicants develop high-quality programs. Otherwise, applicants must guess how to improve, forcing math and science education to suffer in the meantime.

The bill also authorizes $12 million for NSF to conduct and evaluate research related to the science of learning and teaching math and science. It directs NSF to develop ways to apply, duplicate and scale up the results of such research for use in low-performing elementary and secondary classrooms to improve the teaching and student achievement levels of mathematics and science. This investment will make sure that we find out the best ways to teach math and science. With that knowledge, we will have the building blocks we need to effectively argue for, and demand, more funding for the Math and Science Partnership Program.

This bill attempts to make the best out of a not ideal predicament for math and science education. I believe it is the right thing to do, and I respectfully request my fellow Senators support.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2902

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SENATE RESOLUTION 321—COMMEMORATING THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN HIGHER EDUCATION CONSORTIUM (AIHEC)

Mr. CAMPBELL (for himself, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. CONRAD, and Ms. STABENOW) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

S. RES. 321

Whereas the United States of America and Indian Tribes have a unique legal and political relationship as expressed in the U.S. Constitution, Treaties, Federal statutes and executive orders, court decisions, and course of dealing.

Whereas the United States has committed itself to national educational excellence including excellence in institutions that educate American Indian and Alaska Native children and adults.

Whereas Tribal Colleges and Universities are fully accredited community-based educational institutions devoted to the education, welfare and economic advancement of American Indian communities.

Whereas, the populations in the communities served by Tribal Colleges and Universities are among the poorest of the nation, and the services provided by the Tribal Colleges and Universities enable students to train for and obtain jobs that offer social and economic stability, and serve to reduce welfare dependence in these communities.

Whereas, Tribal Colleges and Universities are chronically underfunded, and in addition to offering their communities higher education opportunities, also function as community centers, libraries, childcare centers, tribal archives, career and business centers, economic development centers, and public meeting places.

Whereas in 1970 President Nixon issued his now-famous "Special Message to Congress on Indian Affairs" rejecting the failed policies of assimilation and termination and heralding the new era of Indian Self Determination.

Whereas in 1972 six Tribal Colleges established the American Indian Higher Education Consortium to empower its member institutions through collective action, construct a national support and communications network, and assist Indian communities and Native people in the field of educational achievement, while nurturing, advocating, and protecting American Indian history, culture, art and language.

Whereas The American Indian Higher Education Consortium consists of 32 Tribal Colleges and Universities located in 12 states that enroll approximately 30,000 full- and part-time students from over 250 Federally-recognized Indian Tribes.

Whereas on July 3, 2002, President Bush issued Executive Order 13270 ensuring that Tribal Colleges and Universities are more fully recognized and integrated into the American family of institutions of higher education.

Whereas tribal Colleges and Universities provide access to information technology critical to full participation in America's economic, political and social life, bridging great distances and transforming learning environment.

Whereas, Tribal Colleges and Universities and their Native communities continue to play an integral role in American Indian education including in assisting in the implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act of 2002. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Senate of the United States recognizes the essential role Tribal Colleges and Universities play in American Indian communities, honors the vision and commitment of the founders of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium, and celebrates 30 successful years of implementing that vision for the benefit of American Indian peoples across the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined today by Senators DORGAN, MURKOWSKI, DOMENICI, BINGAMAN, CONRAD and STABENOW in submitting a resolution to commemorate the establishment of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium that took place in the fall of 1972.

In the late 1960s Indian people began to realize that their futures depended more on their own keen insights, beliefs and actions than on those of the Federal Government or other communities.

This phenomenon was assisted in 1970 when President Nixon issued his "Special Message to Congress on Indian Affairs" which rejected the tried and failed policies of assimilation and termination. Nixon's message launched the era of Indian Self Determination with a renewed focus on local, tribal decision making and economic self sufficiency.

In 1972 six Indian tribal colleges joined forces to form the American Indian Higher Education Consortium, AIHEC, with the goal of creating a network of tribally-controlled institutions of higher education.

The founders of the AIHEC envisioned that through collective action, they could better assist Indian communities and Native people in the field of education and vocational education.

Thirty years later, the American Indian Higher Education Consortium has grown to include 32 Tribal Colleges and Universities located in 12 States with an enrollment of 30,000 students from over 250 federally recognized Indian Tribes.

Tribal Colleges and Universities provide quality higher education to Indian students and have become the "hubs" of a sort for accessing state-of-the-art information technology. It is important to realize that in addition to providing educational opportunities for their communities, these institutions function as community centers, libraries, childcare centers, tribal archives, career and business centers, economic development centers and public meeting places.

The communities served by Tribal Colleges and Universities are among the poorest in the Nation. The training and education provided by Tribal Colleges and Universities allows Native students to prepare for and obtain jobs that offer a decent salary with benefits, and help reduce the trap of dependency that has befallen so many Native people.

On July 3, 2002 President Bush issued Executive Order 13270 recognizing the enduring contributions of Indian Tribal Colleges and Universities and hailing their success on a wide range of issues.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution which recognizes the critical role Tribal Colleges and Universities play in American Indian communities, honors the vision and commitment of the founders of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium, and celebrates 30 successful years of implementing that vision for the benefit of American Indian peoples across the United States.

SEC. 317. None of the funds in this Act may be used for planning, design or construction of improvements to Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House without the advance approval of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

SEC. 318. Amounts deposited during fiscal year 2002 in the roads and trails fund provided for in the 14th paragraph under the heading "FOREST SERVICE" of the Act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 843; 16 U.S.C. 501), shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture, without regard to the State in which the amounts were derived, to repair or reconstruct roads, bridges, and trails on National Forest System lands or to carry out and administer projects to improve forest health conditions, which may include the repair or reconstruction of roads, bridges, and trails on National Forest System lands in the wildland-community interface where there is an abnormally high risk of fire. The projects shall emphasize reducing risks to human safety and public health and property and enhancing ecological functions, long-term forest productivity, and biological integrity. The projects may be completed in a subsequent fiscal year. Funds shall not be expended under this section to replace funds which would otherwise appropriately be expended from the timber salvage sale fund. Nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt any project from any environmental law.

SEC. 319. No timber sale in Region 10 shall be advertised if the indicated rate is deficit when appraised using a residual value approach that assigns domestic Alaska values for western redcedar. Program accomplishments shall be based on volume sold. Should Region 10 sell, in fiscal year 2003, the annual average portion of the decadal allowable sale quantity called for in the current Tongass Land Management Plan in sales which are not deficit when appraised using a residual value approach that assigns domestic Alaska values for western redcedar, all of the western redcedar timber from those sales which is surplus to the needs of domestic processors in Alaska, shall be made available to domestic processors in the contiguous 48 United States at prevailing domestic prices. Should Region 10 sell, in fiscal year 2003, less than the annual average portion of the decadal allowable sale quantity called for in the Tongass Land Management Plan in sales which are not deficit when appraised using a residual value approach that assigns domestic Alaska values for western redcedar, the volume of western redcedar timber available to domestic processors at prevailing domestic prices in the contiguous 48 United States shall be that volume: (i) which is surplus to the needs of domestic processors in Alaska, and (ii) is that percent of the surplus western redcedar volume determined by calculating the ratio of the total timber volume which has been sold on the Tongass to the annual average portion of the decadal allowable sale quantity called for in the current Tongass Land Management Plan. The percentage shall be calculated by Region 10 on a rolling basis as each sale is sold (for purposes of this amendment, a "rolling basis" shall mean that the determination of how much western redcedar is eligible for sale to various markets shall be made at the time each sale is awarded). Western redcedar shall be deemed "surplus to the needs of domestic processors in Alaska" when the timber sale holder has presented to the Forest Service documentation of the inability to sell western redcedar logs from a given sale to domestic Alaska processors at a price equal to or greater than the log selling value stated in the contract. All additional western redcedar volume not sold to Alaska or contiguous 48 United States domestic processors may be exported to foreign markets at the election of the timber sale holder. All Alaska yellow cedar may be sold at prevailing export prices at the election of the timber sale holder.

SEC. 320. A project undertaken by the Forest Service under the Recreation Fee Demonstration Program as authorized by section 315 of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1996, as amended, shall not result in—

(1) displacement of the holder of an authorization to provide commercial recreation services on Federal lands. Prior to initiating any project, the Secretary shall consult with potentially affected holders to determine what impacts the project may have on the holders. Any modifications to the authorization shall be made within the terms and conditions of the authorization and authorities of the impacted agency.

(2) the return of a commercial recreation service to the Secretary for operation when such services have been provided in the past by a private sector provider, except when—

(A) the private sector provider fails to bid on such opportunities;

(B) the private sector provider terminates its relationship with the agency; or

(C) the agency revokes the permit for non-compliance with the terms and conditions of the authorization.

In such cases, the agency may use the Recreation Fee Demonstration Program to provide for operations until a subsequent operator can be found through the offering of a new prospectus.

SEC. 321. REVISION OF FOREST PLANS. Prior to October 1, 2003, the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be considered to be in violation of subparagraph 6(f)(5)(A) of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1604(f)(5)(A)) solely because more than 15 years have passed without revision of the plan for a unit of the National Forest System. Nothing in this section exempts the Secretary from any other requirement of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act (16 U.S.C. 1600 et seq.) or any other law: Provided, That if the Secretary is not acting expeditiously and in good faith, within the funding available, to revise a plan for a unit of the National Forest System, this section shall be void with respect to such plan and a court of proper jurisdiction may order completion of the plan on an accelerated basis.

SEC. 322. No funds provided in this Act may be expended to conduct preleasing, leasing and related activities under either the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.) or the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 et seq.) within the boundaries of a National Monument established pursuant to the Act of June 8, 1906 (16 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) as such boundary existed on January 20, 2001, except where such activities are allowed under the Presidential proclamation establishing such monument.

SEC. 323. Section 347(a) of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999, as included in Public Law 105-277 is amended by striking "2004" and inserting "2005". The authority to enter into stewardship and end result contracts provided to the Forest Service in accordance with section 347 of title III of section 101(e) of division A of Public Law 105-277 is hereby expanded to authorize the Forest Service to enter into an additional 28 contracts subject to the same terms and conditions as provided in that section: Provided, That of the additional contracts authorized by this section at least 9 shall be allocated to Region 1.

SEC. 324. Employees of the foundations established by Acts of Congress to solicit private sector funds on behalf of Federal land management agencies shall, beginning in fiscal year 2004, qualify for General Service Administration contract airfares.

SEC. 325. In entering into agreements with foreign countries pursuant to the Wildfire Suppression Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 1856m) the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior are authorized to enter into reciprocal agreements in which the individuals furnished under said agreements to provide wildfire services are considered, for purposes of tort liability, employees of the country receiving said services when the individuals are fighting fires. The Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior shall not enter into any agreement under this provision unless the foreign country (either directly or through its fire organization) agrees to assume any and all liability for the acts or omissions of American firefighters engaged in firefighting in a foreign country. When an agreement is reached for furnishing fire fighting services, the only remedies for acts or omissions committed while fighting fires shall be those provided under the laws of the host country and those remedies shall be the exclusive remedies for any claim arising out of fighting fires in a foreign country. Neither the sending country nor any organization associated with the firefighter shall be subject to any action whatsoever pertaining to or arising out of fighting fires.

SEC. 326. A grazing permit or lease issued by the Secretary of the Interior or a grazing permit issued by the Secretary of Agriculture where National Forest System lands are involved that expires, is transferred, or waived during fiscal year 2003 shall be renewed under Section 402 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, as amended (43 U.S.C. 1752), Section 19 of the Granger-Thye Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 5801), or, if applicable, section 510 of the California Desert Protection Act (16 U.S.C. 410aaa-50). The terms and conditions contained in the expired, transferred, or waived permit or lease shall continue in effect under the renewed permit or lease until such time as the Secretary of the Interior or Secretary of Agriculture as appropriate completes processing of such permit or lease in compliance with all applicable laws and regulations, at which time such permit or lease may be canceled, suspended or modified, in whole or in part, to meet the requirements of such applicable laws and regulations. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to alter the statutory authority of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That where National Forest System lands are involved and the Secretary of Agriculture has renewed an expired or waived grazing permit prior to fiscal year 2003 under the authority of Section 504 of the Rescissions Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-19), the terms and conditions of the renewed grazing permit shall remain in effect until such time as the Secretary of Agriculture completes processing of the renewed permit in compliance with all applicable laws and regulations or until the expiration of the renewed permit, whichever comes first. Upon completion of the processing, the permit may be canceled, suspended or modified, in whole or in part, to meet the requirements of applicable laws and regulations. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to alter the Secretary of Agriculture's statutory authority.

SEC. 327. In awarding a Federal Contract with funds made available by this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior (the "Secretaries") may, in evaluating bids and proposals, give consideration to local contractors who are from, and who provide employment and training for, dislocated and displaced workers in an economically disadvantaged rural community, including those historically timber-dependent areas that have been affected by reduced timber harvesting on Federal lands and other forest-dependent rural communities isolated from significant alternative employment opportunities: Provided, That the contract is for forest hazardous fuels reduction, watershed or water quality monitoring or restoration, wildlife or fish population monitoring, or habitat restoration or management: Provided further, That the terms "rural community" and "economically disadvantaged" shall have the same meanings as in section 2374 of Public Law 101-624: Provided further, That the Secretaries shall develop guidance to implement this section: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed as relieving the Secretaries of any duty under applicable procurement laws, except as provided in this section.

TITLE —EMERGENCY AGRICULTURAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

SEC. . 01. CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 508(b)(7) of the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1508(b)(7)), the Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this title as the "Secretary") shall use such sums as are necessary of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to make emergency financial assistance authorized under this section available to producers on a farm that have incurred qualifying crop losses for the 2001 or 2002 crop due to damaging weather or related condition, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary shall make assistance available under this section in the same manner as provided under section 815 of the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (Public Law 106-387; 114 Stat. 1549A-55), including using the same loss thresholds for the quantity and quality losses as were used in administering that section.

SEC. . 02. LIVESTOCK ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall use such sums as are necessary of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation as are necessary to make and administer payments for livestock losses to producers for 2001 and 2002 losses in a county that has received an emergency designation by the President or the Secretary after January 1, 2001, and January 1, 2002, respectively, of which an amount determined by the Secretary shall be made available for the American Indian livestock program under section 806 of the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (Public Law 106-387; 114 Stat. 1549A-51).

(3) chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code (commonly known as the "Paperwork Reduction Act").

(c) CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW OF AGENCY RULEMAKING.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall use the authority provided under section 808 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 05. EMERGENCY DESIGNATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The entire amount made available under this title shall be available only to the extent that the President submits to Congress an official budget request for a specific dollar amount that includes designation of the entire amount of the request as an emergency requirement for the purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 900 et seq.).

(b) DESIGNATION.—The entire amount made available under this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement under sections 251(b)(2)(A) and 252(e) of that Act (2 U.S.C. 901(b)(2)(A), 902(e)).

SA 4482. Mr. MURKOWSKI submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 5005, to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . AGE AND OTHER LIMITATIONS.

(a) GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, beginning on the date that is 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act—

(1) section 121.383(c) of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, shall not apply;

(2) no certificate holder may use the services of any person as a pilot on an airplane engaged in operations under part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, if that person is 63 years of age or older; and

(3) no person may serve as a pilot on an airplane engaged in operations under part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, if that person is 63 years of age or older.

(b) CERTIFICATE HOLDER.—For purposes of this section, the term "certificate holder" means a holder of a certificate to operate as an air carrier or commercial operator issued by the Federal Aviation Administration.

(c) RESERVATION OF SAFETY AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section is intended to change the authority of the Federal Aviation Administration to take steps to ensure the safety of air transportation operations involving a pilot who has reached the age of 60, including its authority—

(1) to require such a pilot to undergo additional or more stringent medical, cognitive, or proficiency testing in order to retain certification; or

SEC. . FOOD AND DRINKING WATER SUPPLY SECURITY PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) section 413 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5180) authorizes the purchase of food commodities to provide adequate supplies of food for use in any area of the United States in the event of a major disaster or emergency in the area;

(2) the current terrorist threat was not envisioned when that Act was enacted, and the Act does not specifically require prepositioning of food supplies;

(3) the maintenance of safe food and drinking water supplies is essential;

(4) stored food supplies for major cities are minimal;

(5) if terrorist activity were to disrupt the transportation system, affect food supplies directly, or create a situation in which a quarantine would have to be declared, it would require a considerable period of time to ensure delivery of safe food supplies;

(6) terrorist activity could also disrupt drinking water supplies; and

(7) accordingly, emergency food and drinking water repositories should be established at such locations as will ensure the availability of food and drinking water to populations in areas that are vulnerable to terrorist activity.

(b) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Homeland Security shall submit to Congress a report with information necessary to the establishment of secure prepositioned emergency supplies of food and drinking water for major population centers for use in the event of a breakdown in the food supply and delivery chain.

(2) CONSIDERATIONS.—The report shall consider the likelihood of such breakdowns occurring from accidents and natural disasters as well as terrorist activity.

(3) CONTENTS.—The report shall—

(A) identify the 20 most vulnerable metropolitan areas or population concentrations in the United States; and

(B) make recommendations regarding the appropriate number of days' supply of food to be maintained to ensure the security of the population in each such area.

(c) REPOSITORIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Homeland Security shall establish secure repositories for food and drinking water in each of the 20 areas identified in the report.

(2) ACCESSIBILITY.—The repositories shall be locally accessible without special equipment in the event of major transportation breakdown.

(d) PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall purchase and maintain food and water stocks for each repository, consistent with determinations made by the Secretary of Homeland Security.

(2) PHASING IN.—Purchases and full stocking of repositories may be phased in over a period of not more than 3 years.

(3) PRODUCTS OF THE UNITED STATES.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall purchase for the repositories food and water supplies produced, processed, and packaged exclusively in the United States.

(4) SELECTION.—Food and water supplies for the repositories shall be selected and managed so as to provide—

(A) quantities and packaging suitable for immediate distribution to individuals and families;

(B) forms of food products suitable for immediate consumption in an emergency without heating and without further preparation;

(C) packaging that ensures that food products are maximally resistant to postproduction contamination or adulteration;

(D) packaging and preservation technology to ensure that the quality of stored food and water is maintained for a minimum of 4 years at ambient temperatures;

(E) a range of food products, including meats, seafood, dairy, and vegetable (including fruit and grain) products, emphasizing, insofar as practicable—

(i) food products that meet multiple nutritional needs, such as those composed primarily of high-quality protein in combination with essential minerals; and

(ii) food products with a high ratio of nutrient value to cost;

(F) rotation of stock, in repositories on a regular basis at intervals of not longer than 3 years; and

(G) use of stocks of food being rotated out of repositories for other suitable purposes.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out this section.

SA 4484. Mr. MURKOWSKI submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 5005, to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . NATIONAL DEFENSE RAIL CONNECTION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) A comprehensive rail transportation network is a key element of an integrated transportation system for the North American continent, and federal leadership is required to address the needs of a reliable, safe, and secure rail network, and to connect all areas of the United States for national defense and economic development, as previously done for the interstate highway system, the Federal aviation network, and the transcontinental railroad;

(2) The creation and use of joint use corridors for rail transportation, fiber optics, pipelines, and utilities are an efficient and appropriate approach to optimizing the nation's interconnectivity and national security;

(3) Government assistance and encouragement in the development of the transcontinental rail system successfully led to the growth of economically strong and socially stable communities throughout the western United States;

(4) Government assistance and encouragement in the development of the Alaska Railroad between Seward, Alaska and Fairbanks, Alaska successfully led to the growth of economically strong and socially stable communities along the route, which today provide homes for over 70% of Alaska's total population;

(5) While Alaska and the remainder of the continental United States has been connected by highway and air transportation, no rail connection exists despite the fact that Alaska is accessible by land routes and is a logical destination for the North American rail system;

(6) Rail transportation in otherwise isolated areas is an appropriate means of providing controlled access, reducing overall impacts to environmentally sensitive areas over other methods of land-based access;

(7) Because Congress originally authorized 1,000 miles of rail line to be built in Alaska, and because the system today covers only approximately half that distance, substantially limiting its beneficial effect on the economy of Alaska and the nation, it is appropriate to support the expansion of the Alaska system to ensure the originally planned benefits are achieved;

(8) Alaska has an abundance of natural resources, both material and aesthetic, access to which would significantly increase Alaska's contribution to the national economy;

(9) Alaska contains many key national defense installations, including sites chosen for the construction of the first phase of the National Missile Defense system, the cost of which could be significantly reduced if rail transportation were available for the movement of materials necessary for construction and for the secure movement of launch vehicles, fuel and other operational supplies;

(10) The 106th Congress recognized the potential benefits of establishing a rail connection to Alaska by enacting legislation to authorize a U.S.-Canada bilateral commission to study the feasibility of linking the rail system in Alaska to the nearest appropriate point in Canada of the North American rail network; and

(11) In support of pending bilateral activities between the United States and Canada, it is appropriate for the United States to undertake activities relating to elements within the United States.

(b) IDENTIFICATION OF NATIONAL DEFENSE RAILROAD-UTILITY CORRIDOR.—

(1) Within one year from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, the State of Alaska and the Alaska Railroad Corporation, shall identify a proposed national defense railroad-utility corridor linking the existing corridor of the Alaska Railroad to the vicinity of the proposed National Missile Defense facilities at Fort Greely, Alaska. The corridor shall be at least 500 feet wide and shall also identify land for such terminals, stations, maintenance facilities, switching yards, and material sites as are considered necessary.

(2) The identification of the corridor under paragraph (1) shall include information providing a complete legal description and noting the current ownership of the proposed corridor and associated land.

(3) In identifying the corridor under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall consider, at a minimum, the following factors:

(A) The proximity of national defense installations and national defense considerations;

(B) The location of and access to natural resources that could contribute to economic development of the region;

(C) Grade and alignment standards that are commensurate with rail and utility construction standards and that minimize the prospect of at-grade railroad and highway crossings;

(D) Availability of construction materials;

(E) Safety;

(F) Effects on and service to adjacent communities and potential intermodal transportation connections;

(G) Environmental concerns;

(H) Use of public land to the maximum degree possible;

(I) Minimization of probable construction costs;

(J) An estimate of probable construction costs and methods of financing such costs through a combination of private, state, and federal sources; and

(K) Appropriate utility elements for the corridor, including but not limited to petroleum product pipelines, fiber-optic telecommunication facilities, and electrical power transmission lines, and

(L) Prior and established traditional uses.

(4) The Secretary may, as part of the corridor identification, include issues related to the further extension of such corridor to a connection with the nearest appropriate terminus of the North American rail network in Canada.

(c) NEGOTIATION AND LAND TRANSFER.—

(1) The Secretary of the Interior shall—

(B) other Federal agents;

(C) reinforced cockpit doors;

(D) properly-trained armed pilots;

(E) flight attendants trained in self-defense and terrorism prevention; and

(F) electronic communications devices, such as real-time video monitoring and hands-free wireless communications devices to permit pilots to monitor activities in the cabin.

HONORING THE 2002 LITTLE LEAGUE BASEBALL WORLD SERIES WINNER

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 320, which was introduced earlier today by Senator BUNNING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 320) honoring the Valley Sports American Little League baseball team from Louisville, Kentucky, for winning the 2002 Little League Baseball World Series.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I rise today to take this opportunity, along with my colleague from Kentucky, Senator McCONNELL, to speak in support of this resolution honoring the Valley Sports American Little League Baseball Team from Louisville, Kentucky for winning the 2002 Little League Baseball World Series.

This is the first time in the 56-year history of the Little League World Series that a team from Kentucky has won the championship.

And all of us throughout the commonwealth are very proud of these young men and their coaches.

In fact, this team made it through their entire playoff run without losing a single game—24 games and 24 wins. As someone who played and managed professional baseball for over a quarter-century, I can tell my colleagues just how difficult it is to win 24 games in a row at any level of the sport.

Over the last month, when major league players were bickering with owners about salaries and revenue-sharing and drug-testing, the little leaguers showed the best of what baseball and our young people have to offer.

They played with grit, determination and great skill. They displayed spectacular sportsmanship along with giving us some of the finest baseball you will ever see.

The young men from Valley Sports played America's national pastime as it is meant to be played.

I take this opportunity to congratulate all of these young men—Aaron Alvey, Justin Elkins, Ethan Henry, Alex Hornback, Wes Jenkins, Casey Jordan, Shane Logsdon, Blaine Madden, Zach Osborne, Jake Remines, Josh Robinson and Wes Walden—along with their manager and coaches—Troy Osborne, Keith Elkins and Dan Roach—for this remarkable achievement.

Their heart and determination are models for us all. In my mind, they are all true all stars.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I might note just in passing, this is a resolution honoring the Kentucky baseball team that won the Little League World Series, and there can be no better person to do this than the Senator from Kentucky, who is a member of the professional Baseball Hall of Fame. So I think it is worth noting that a Member of the U.S. Senate, who is a member of the Baseball Hall of Fame, offers a resolution commending his State's team for winning the Little League World Series.

I ask consent that the resolution and preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 320) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

(The resolution will be printed in a future edition of the RECORD.)

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY,
SEPTEMBER 5, 2002

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 9:30 tomorrow morning; that following the prayer and the pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate resume consideration of the Interior Appropriations Act; further at noon there be a period of morning business until 1 o'clock, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the first half of the time under the control of the Republican leader or his designee, and the second half under the control of the majority leader or his designee, and that at 1 p.m. the Senate resume consideration of the Homeland Security Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VOTES ON PENDING AMENDMENTS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have two amendments also that are now pending, the Wellstone amendment and the Smith amendment. One is dealing with corporate offshore locations, the other deals with guns in cockpits of airplanes. They are both very important amendments.

I hope we could vote on these tomorrow. Remember, we have the ceremony in New York on Friday; therefore, we will not be able to get back on this legislation until next week.

I know there is some concern about the Wellstone amendment by some Senators, but I hope there would not be an effort to delay this very important legislation because of this amendment.

We are going to vote on it. It is only a question of when. People already know what they are going to do on this. So I hope we could move this legislation along. I think it will send a significant message to the President that this week we accomplished something on this bill that he feels so strongly about and that the two managers of this bill feel strongly about.

I think it would send the wrong message if we have no votes this week. The only reason we would not have votes is because the minority will not allow us to have votes.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M.
TOMORROW

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 5:31 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, September 5, 2002, at 9:30 a.m.

Shed divine wisdom upon them that they may be gifted with insights, choose their words carefully and make solid judgments and prudent decisions.

RESOLUTION CELEBRATING HEROISM AND BRAVERY

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, just some basic facts. Each and every year every American uses 47,000 pounds of mined materials. Of that, 7,600 pounds are coal; and coal generates more than half of our domestic electricity, providing millions of Americans with energy that they need.

Mr. Speaker, it is the miner who we should thank for providing us with the quality of life that we enjoy, and we should remember that their work often comes at great personal risk.

In fact, on July 27, nine coal miners were trapped 240 feet below the Earth's surface for 77 hours in absolute darkness and chest deep in 55-degree water. This event revealed what is great about America, because hundreds of individuals courageously worked to rescue these nine men and return them safely to their families. Thankfully, we all witnessed a miracle as each miner was brought to the surface healthy and safe.

To express our sincere gratitude to these nine miners and their rescue crews, I am entering a concurrent resolution honoring these individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all of my colleagues join me in supporting this resolution which celebrates heroism and bravery.

WAR SHOULD NOT BE FIRST INSTRUMENT OF FOREIGN POLICY

(Mr. DOGGETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, overshadowing all of our hopes and dreams for our families and for our country is the daily talk of war. This Administration's apparent intent to launch a go-it-alone invasion of another country is unprecedented in American history, it is unprecedented in ignoring the warnings of military experts, it is unprecedented in rejecting the advice of our allies and, most importantly, unprecedented in the dangers posed for the safety of American families everywhere.

At one time "regime change" was the now-abandoned goal of our foreign policy toward an island 90 miles off our shores. Immediate success is even less certain for a regime on the other side of the world through a means uniformly rejected at present by the countries of the region. Of course, Saddam Hussein is a menace, as was Libya's Muammar Qaddafi, as was Josef Stalin. But able policymakers of both parties found ways to contain such threats without starting what could become another world war.

Mr. President, unite our country and the world to eliminate weapons of mass destruction; do not divide us by making war the first instrument of your foreign policy.

CONGRESS SHOULD THINK TWICE BEFORE THRUSTING U.S. INTO WAR

(Mr. PAUL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge the Congress to think twice before thrusting this Nation into a war without merit, one fraught with danger of escalating into something no American will be pleased with.

Thomas Jefferson advised, "Never was so much false arithmetic employed on any subject as that which has been employed to persuade nations that it is in their interests to go to war." We have for months now heard plenty of false arithmetic and lame excuses on which we must pursue a preemptive war of aggression against an impoverished, third-world nation 6,000 miles from our shores that does not even possess a navy or air force, with the pretense that it must be done for national security interests.

For some reason, such an attack makes me feel much less secure while our country is made more vulnerable.

Congress must consider the fact that those with military experience advise a go-slow policy, and those without military experience are the ones demanding this war.

We cannot ignore the fact that all Iraq's Arab neighbors are opposed to this attack and our European allies object as well. If the military and diplomatic reasons for policy restraint make no sense, I advise they consider the $100 billion it will cost and that will surely compound our serious budgetary and economic problems we face here at home. We need no more false arithmetic on our budget or false reasons for pursuing this new adventure into preemptive war and worldwide nation-building.

THE CASE AGAINST SADDAM HUSSEIN HAS BEEN MADE

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am a newcomer to Congress. I have been here only 8 months. I also have the distinction of being the only Member who is a member of the National Guard still drilling. At this time I have had, of course, my first August recess.

During the August recess, the issue that came up the most was the issue already discussed, and that is the danger of Iraq. We now have a bloodthirsty dictator who has access to chemical, nuclear, and biological weapons; he has the ability with ballistic missiles to send them against American allies and against American troops that are stationed throughout the Middle East.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should put our faith in the President, the intelligence agencies that we have, the wonderful military that we have, and the civilian military officials that we have before us. We need to understand there was a vote on September 14, 2001, right here in Congress, almost unanimously, to provide for military action against those who harbor or support terrorists, and the intent of that was to stop future terrorist attacks on the United States.

America has been attacked, and we are under threat. This is not a speculation as to the future; it has occurred. It will occur again if we do not take action to defend our civilian citizens.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken after debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules, but not before 6:30 p.m. today.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE UNITED STATES CONGRESSIONAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 183) expressing the sense of Congress regarding the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society and its mission of promoting musical excellence throughout the educational system and encouraging people of all ages to commit to the love and expression of musical performance.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 183

Whereas in February 1996, several Senators and members of the House of Representatives participated in a performance of the Broadway musical "1776", a story depicting the signing of the Declaration of Independence;

Whereas in April 1996 several Senators and members of the House of Representatives met with Maestro Martin Piecuch, the music director of the musical "1776", and formed the United States Congressional Choral Society;

Whereas on May 20, 1998, the United States Congressional Choral Society debuted at St. Joseph's Church on Capitol Hill, with standing ovations following its rendition of the "Song of Democracy" and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic";

Whereas on March 13, 1999, the United States Congressional Philharmonic Orchestra String Quartet played before the Ambassador to the United States from Canada at the Embassy of Canada in the District of Columbia;

Whereas on March 19, 1999, the United States Congressional Choral Society appeared in performance at the Washington National Cathedral;

Whereas on May 13, 1999, the United States Congressional Philharmonic Orchestra String Quartet played before a gathering of Ambassadors at the Benjamin Franklin Diplomatic Reception Room of the United States Department of State;

Whereas the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society is approved as a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization under the Internal Revenue Code and is a corporation in good standing under the laws of the State of Delaware;

Whereas the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society will offer free concerts to the public in the Washington metropolitan area;

Whereas the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society will encourage the development of young musical talent across the United States by providing educational programs for schools across the nation and establishing internships and scholarships; and

Whereas the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society envisions holding a series of concerts focusing on themes such as Celebrations of America, Salutes to the States, a Great Americans series, and an International Congressional Concert series: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society should be applauded—

(1) for organizing two musical groups, the United States Congressional Choral Society and the United States Congressional Philharmonic Orchestra;

(2) for having as its mission the promotion of patriotism, freedom, democracy, and understanding of American culture through sponsorship, management, and support of these groups and their derivative ensembles as they communicate through the international language of music in concerts and other multimedia performances in the District of Columbia and throughout the United States and the world; and

(3) for promoting musical excellence throughout the educational system, from pre-school through post-graduate, and encouraging people of all ages to commit to the love and expression of musical performance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE).

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Today I rise in strong support of H. Con. Res. 183, which expresses the sense of Congress regarding the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society and its dual mission of promoting musical excellence throughout the educational system and encouraging people of all ages to appreciate musical performances.

In 1996, several Senators and Members of the House participated in a performance of the award-winning Broadway musical "1776," a story depicting the signing of the Declaration of Independence. A few months later, the United States Congressional Choral Society was formed. By all accounts, Members, staff, and friends of the United States Congress enjoyed their experience; and as a result, they also created the United States Congressional Orchestra, which debuted in 1999.

Today, both the Choral Society and the orchestra operate under a privately funded umbrella organization, the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society. Its vision is to become the artistic voice of America, encouraging Members, staff, and friends to use their musical talents and present musical programs that will enrich the lives of all Americans with patriotic and classical presentations.

These free concerts, which are available to the public in the Washington Metropolitan Area, often play to standing ovations. More important, they also encourage and support the development of young talent through internships, scholarships, and educational programs through schools.

I applaud the Congressional Philharmonic Society for successfully promoting patriotism, freedom, democracy, and understanding of American culture through music.

In conclusion, I would like to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS) for introducing this important resolution. I would urge my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 183 and the Congressional Philharmonic Society.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 183. This resolution applauds the work of the U.S. Congressional Philharmonic Society and its promotion of musical excellence, patriotism, freedom, and democracy.

The U.S. Congressional Philharmonic Society is actually made up of two groups, the United States Congressional Choral Society, which has performed at St. Joseph's Church on Capitol Hill and the Washington National cathedral, and the United States Congressional Philharmonic Orchestra, which has performed before foreign heads of state.

Both of these organizations provide a valuable benefit to the people of Washington, D.C. and around the Nation in extolling the virtue of democracy and patriotism through music and song. Song and music have played an important role in many of our Nation's most historic moments, and the Society continues this tradition through its work.

The House does a great service today by recognizing this organization. I urge Members to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), the sponsor of the legislation.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a proud sponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 183, commending the United States Philharmonic Society for their commitment to promote musical excellence throughout the educational system, and to encourage people of all ages to commit to the joy and expression of musical performance.

I believe that Americans should be encouraged to participate in music and art programs. Arts education programs, and specifically music education programs, have a positive impact on the lives of our children. Music education is a valuable lesson that serves to enrich our Society.

The United States Congressional Philharmonic Society plays an important role in accomplishing these goals. The United States Congressional Philharmonic Society has created its own unique mission, which promotes patriotism, freedom, democracy, and the understanding of American culture through sponsorship, management, and education. It has gained support through the international language of music in concerts and performances in the United States and throughout the world.

Under the organization of Maestro Martin Piecuch, the Congressional Philharmonic has quickly established itself as a voice of freedom and democracy through the art of music.

As the Music Director and Conductor of the Washington Symphony Orchestra, he has played a great role in the world of music for the citizens of Northern Virginia. He has served as resident conductor, orchestra manager, and chorus manager at Wolf Trap Farm Park for the Performing Arts, and has held the position of Music Conductor and Director for the Alexandria Choral Society.

Maestro Piecuch can be credited with planting the seed when he directed the Broadway musical 1776 at DAR Constitution Hall in March of 1995, in which 12 Members of Congress played roles as Founding Fathers of our great Nation.

With this the U.S. Congressional Choral Society was founded, and in May of 1998 the Congressional Choral Society debuted at St. Joseph's Church right here on Capitol Hill. From this successful base came the idea for the creation of the U.S. Congressional Orchestra, which, together with the Choral Society, operates under the organization of the U.S. Congressional Philharmonic Society.

Today, the U.S. Congressional Philharmonic, composed of Members, executives, and staffers on Capitol Hill, acts as an artistic voice for Congress. Created to honor the U.S. Congress, its Members, and constituents, the U.S. Congressional Philharmonic performs concerts all year round to salute our Nation's States, to salute American heritage, our great American statesmen, and appropriate cultural programs at various holiday periods throughout the year.

In addition to these commitments, it has developed many projects of its own to promote its premier causes, that include a concert series to promote democracy and peace throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society is a living example of how our country's principles of freedom and liberty can be showcased for the entire world through music. I urge all Members to join me in supporting and commending the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak in support of the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society, which will serve as the artistic voice of Congress and highlight works of American composers.

I want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), for introducing it, and I am proud to be one of the original cosponsors with him.

The United States Congressional Philharmonic Society is composed of two groups: the United States Congressional Choral Society, whose Members are Capitol Hill staffers, and a professional symphonic orchestra, the United States Congressional Philharmonic.

The organization is led by the wonderful maestro, Maestro Martin Piecuch, who was the Conductor and Musical Director of the Washington Symphony for 9 years.

As many of us remember, the genesis of the Congressional Philharmonic Society was a 1996 production of the Broadway musical 1776, which featured Members of Congress portraying some of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Since then, the Choral Society and the Philharmonic Orchestra have performed in various functions in Washington, both together and individually, to rave reviews. The orchestra's string quartet has played for numerous ambassadors, while the chorus' appearances include a performance at the National Cathedral.

We are here today to give the Philharmonic Society the official imprimatur of Congress, and we do so enthusiastically. The performing arts are so vitally important. They entertain us, inspire us, and give us a sense of wonder. I am honored to be here to support this wonderful endeavor.

The Philharmonic Society plans to perform free concerts in the Washington Metropolitan Area, and explore such themes as celebrations of America and salutes to the States, as well as encourage the development of young musical talent by providing educational programs for schools across the Nation.

The Society is a private group, but with our blessing it can raise money to fulfill its mission. As Shakespeare once wrote, if music is the food of love, play on. I give my support to this organization, and look forward to hearing their performances for years to come.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am just delighted to be here today to speak on behalf of this sense of Congress, which looks at the United States Philharmonic Society and applauds them, and tells them that we are very proud of the great work that they are doing.

I am delighted to be here to join with my colleagues, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), and I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) for introducing this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to echo the words of the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS), and thank her for her participation in support of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 183.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO).

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Kennedy Center suffers from being isolated from the rest of Washington, D.C.’s monumental core, and from limited, confusing, and potentially unsafe points of entry. High levels of congestion on the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway confound vehicular traffic and various bridge ramps near performance times. Nearly 200,000 vehicles a day use the complex of roadways and ramps adjacent to the center each day, and there are high accident rates at the foot of the Roosevelt Bridge and the intersection of Virginia Avenue, 27th Street, and the parkway.

H.R. 5012 authorizes the Secretary of the Department of Transportation, in conjunction with the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and the District of Columbia, to make pedestrian and vehicular access improvements around the Kennedy Center.

In 1998, when the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure passed TEA-21, it authorized the Secretary of Transportation to undertake a comprehensive study of ways to improve the flow of traffic and access to the Kennedy Center. In 2000, the Department of Transportation issued the Kennedy Center access study, which identified five phases to improving access to the Kennedy Center. In that same year, funding was made available for DOT to proceed with preliminary project planning, environmental reviews, and design approvals.

The John F. Kennedy Center Plaza Authorization Act of 2002 builds upon these earlier efforts and authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to enact many of the improvements recommended by the access study, including the outcomes of a pedestrian plaza over the Potomac Freeway and improving access between I-66, the Rock Creek Parkway, E Street Northwest, 25th Street Northwest, and the Kennedy Center.

The new plaza will be connected to the local street grid by E and 25th Streets Northwest, and will create approximately eight acres of new land directly east of the Kennedy Center.

H.R. 5012 authorizes and directs the Mayor of the District of Columbia to transfer the air rights and airspace necessary to complete the project as determined by DOT. This has the support of the Mayor, and the subcommittee received testimony from the District to that effect at a hearing held on June 13, 2002.

Based on DOT testimony, the bill authorizes a total of $400 million to undertake the recommended improvements. In addition, H.R. 5012 authorizes the Kennedy Center to construct buildings on the newly created plaza with nonappropriated funds. The newly constructed buildings will provide needed space for educational, rehearsal, performance, and administrative functions, and become a part of the living memorial to President Kennedy. Any private donations for the buildings will be acknowledged in a manner consistent with existing law.

The subcommittee on Economic Development, Public Buildings and Emergency Management held a hearing on this important project in June, and the project received the enthusiastic support of the Department of Transportation, the government of the District of Columbia, and the Kennedy Center. I support this legislation and encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the following material regarding the project:

U.S. CONGRESS,

Infrastructure,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 5012, the John F. Kennedy Center Plaza Authorization Act of 2002.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

The CBO staff contacts are Rachel Milberg (for federal costs), who can be reached at 226-2860, and Greg Waring (for the state and local impact), who can be reached at 225-3220.

(For Dan L. Crippen, Director).

Enclosure.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE
H.R. 5012—John F. Kennedy Center Plaza Authorization Act of 2002

Summary: H.R. 5012 would authorize the appropriation of $400 million to the Department of Transportation (DOT) to plan and construct a new plaza in front of the John F. Kennedy Center, and to improve access to the Center for both pedestrians and vehicles.

Assuming appropriation of the authorized amount, CBO estimate that implementing H.R. 5012 would cost about $135 million over the 2003-2007 period and another $265 million after 2007. Enacting H.R. 5012 would not affect direct spending or receipts; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures would not apply.

H.R. 5012 contains intergovernmental mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA), but CBO estimates that the costs would be significantly below the threshold established in that act ($58 million in 2002, adjusted annually for inflation). The bill contains no private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimate budgetary impact of H.R. 5012 is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget function 400 (transportation).

	By fiscal year, in millions of dollars—
	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
CHANGES IN SPENDING SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION
Estimated Authorization Level <sup>1</sup>	10	10	20	50	100
Estimated Outlays	3	7	10	40	75

<sup>1</sup>H.R. 5012 would authorize the appropriation of $400 million over the 2003-2010 period. CBO estimates that $190 million of that amount could be appropriated over the 2003-2007 period, with the remaining $210 million provided after 2007.

Basis of estimate: For this estimate, CBO assumes that H.R. 5012 will be enacted near the end of fiscal year 2002 and that the amounts necessary to implement the bill will be appropriated for each year. Estimates of outlays are based on information from the Federal Highway Administration, the John F. Kennedy Center, and historical spending patterns of similar projects. Based on information from the agency, CBO estimates that DOT would plan and construct the plaza project over the next 12 years. Current plans for the plaza include space for two small buildings.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: None.

Estimated impact on state, local, and tribal governments: H.R. 5012 would bypass the D.C. City Council’s review and approval of efforts to dispose of D.C. property for the Kennedy Center Plaza project. In preempting the City Council’s authority, the bill contains an intergovernmental mandate as defined in UMRA, but CBO estimates that it would impose no duty on the city government that would result in additional spending.

If necessary for the construction of the proposed Kennedy Center Plaza, the District of Columbia would have to reconfigure the city highway system. In addition, the District of Columbia would have to transfer any property or air rights required for the project, without compensation. These potential requirements on the city also would be intergovernmental mandates as defined in UMRA. Based on information from the Federal Highway Administration and the District’s Department of Transportation, CBO estimates that the costs of complying with these mandates would be significantly below the threshold established in that act ($58 million in 2002, adjusted annually for inflation). Furthermore, the construction-related costs resulting from the mandates would be funded by the federal government.

Estimated impact on the private sector: H.R. 5012 contains no private-sector mandates as defined in UMR.

Estimate prepared by: Federal Costs: Rachel Milberg; Impact on State, Local, and Tribal Governments: Greg Waring; and Impact on the Private Sector: Jean Talarico.

Estimate approved by: Peter H. Fontaine, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the John F. Kennedy Center has long been envisioned and has been created and established as a living memorial to the late President Kennedy. It is also the Nation's premier cultural institution for the performing arts.

The chairman of our Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), is also a member of the Board of Trustees of the Kennedy Center, and we both know from our participation in the deliberations of the board that the center is this vibrant and dynamic institution that it was envisioned to be. Every year over 5 million people visit, attend, enjoy, and are enriched by performances at the Kennedy Center, particularly the Millennium State performances that are free to the public and operate 365 days a year. They are innovative performances that are available to all the people who come to our Nation's capital for whatever purpose, travel or business, leisure, and people come to enjoy those Millennium State performances in ever-increasing numbers.

But, unfortunately, the Kennedy Center is sort of cut off from the rest of Washington, D.C. The original design of the center does not envision the structure situated as it is today. I can remember when I was working teaching language in Haiti in 1959 and 1960 through 1962, reading, admittedly, with three weeks' delay, the news from Washington and reading this grand design plan set forth by then-President Eisenhower or by his administration for a center for the performing arts in Washington, D.C., and this magnificent sweep of the structure out over the Potomac River and looking back towards monumental Washington. And, of course, the part east of the current location of the Kennedy Center was then dilapidated buildings, all envisioned to be torn down, no roadway where we now have one, and it was intended that this would just connect Washington, D.C. and this new center for the performing arts. That is not the way it worked out.

Funding constraints limited the original scope. The connection with downtown Washington was not realized. The center's problems have multiplied over the years. Attending nighttime performances means that patrons either add to the District of Columbia's notorious rush hour traffic jams or are reduced to a functional but not fully acceptable and adequate shuttle system.

There are over 200,000 vehicles a day that use the complex series of ramps and roadways that are adjacent to the Kennedy Center. There is no pedestrian or bicycle access to the center from the east or from the southeast, from the Washington, D.C. mall.

In many a time I have been driving along that avenue and watched as pedestrians risk their lives running across 4 to 5, 6 lanes of traffic at even heavy traffic times. That is just simply not acceptable. The closest Metro stop to the Kennedy Center is the Foggy Bottom Metro stop a half mile from the center, too far for a good many people to walk comfortably and perhaps not entirely safe either. The center runs a very successful shuttle bus, but there is a lack of frequency, a lack of adequate signage to make it comfortable for walkers to find the center. And, furthermore, this is a very historic neighborhood and people ought to be able to enjoy it in some fashion other than rushing to get from wherever they are parking to the Kennedy Center.

In 1998, the former chairman of our Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, Congressman Shuster, and I worked together to secure funding in the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century, to provide funds for the Department of Transportation to analyze methods to improve access to the Kennedy Center. That study has been completed. It has identified a number of proposed design and access improvements. In particular, the study proposes going back to the original concept of connecting the Kennedy Center with monumental Washington, as I call it, that is the historic sweep of structures and monuments that are testimony to the Nation's history and its evolution with the Kennedy Center. This plan would build a plaza over the spaghetti bowl of freeways, particularly the Potomac freeway, and would create 8 new acres of public space, would connect E Street and 25th Street to the plaza and reestablish the city grid; E Street to be changed at the western terminus to link the center and the core of the city, and there are proposed new connections between Rock Creek Parkway and the Potomac freeway. There would be pedestrian paths, bicycle paths, transit improvements to link the center to the heart of Washington, D.C. That is how it should be. That is how this national cultural center should function.

Based on this study, the bill we bring to the floor today, the Kennedy Center Plaza Authorization Act, authorizes a cooperative venture between the Kennedy Center, the U.S. Department of Transportation, and the District of Columbia to improve access to and from the Kennedy Center. It authorizes, as the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO) said a moment ago, $400 million to plan, design and construct the proposed plaza in order to undertake the necessary highway improvements to create this access to the center.

The Kennedy Center itself has offered to undertake the cost of constructing the new buildings to be constructed on the plaza, buildings that will house rehearsal halls, classrooms, and be an open invitation to the public to actually come and see how rehearsals are conducted. It would be a great opportunity for the public who come to enjoy the arts in our Nation's capital. And I invite any of our colleagues to come to the center or ask the Kennedy Center staff to come and give them a presentation, a showing of the artists' rendition of these structural changes because I think once Members see it, they will be enthralled, captivated and excited by it, as I am, as the members of the board of trustees, and as is the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON).

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the remarks of the ranking member who always brings a background and perspective that makes anyone who has not been fortunate to be in this institution as long as he has understand the continuum of the work we are about and a continuum is what we are about today. I also want to thank the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO) for her hard work in bringing this bill to the floor.

This bill is really part of a larger vision, and one does not have to live here to have that vision. This is a small, compact city. There is not a lot of room left for all of the buildings, not to mention all of the memorials, that people would like to see in Washington. But there is a big, relatively for this city, a big piece of land that could, in fact, house much more to make the Kennedy Center the true national performing arts center it was intended to be. But to even begin to approach this vision, we have a lot of work to do on the basics, and this bill is about the basics. This bill is not about the buildings. I believe they will be constructed all with private funds. I have talked with the dynamic new leader of the Kennedy Center. But there is part of this work that is for government alone.

Its rough name is infrastructure. We have got to lay the groundwork in order for the vision to rise. The mall is a work in progress. The mall is always incomplete. So we should not be surprised that we are always adding to the mall. That is as the Founders wanted it. They have also wanted us to be careful about the mall. They did not want us to put every little thing on the mall. And one of the things I implore my colleagues to remember is that the mall is perpetual. When generations we cannot even imagine are here, the mall should be here, and one of the things we do not want to do is just crowd the mall with the hubris of our generation, leaving no room for anything else to go up. If we do that, we will have to do what some of the European countries are doing. They are tearing down statues in order to allow more to rise. I think we should just be careful what we do.

I believe future generations will look at what this bill initiates as part of the natural process of filling out the mall. And I very much applaud the continuing attention that the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure has given to the Kennedy Center and to the completion of the work there, and especially to the fact that one cannot get there from here.

The 25 million tourists who come to the District of Columbia may do as I do as often as I can. I go on a race walk down the mall beginning at 3rd Street. It is a wonderful way to get exercise. When we get to the Lincoln Memorial, that is it, folks. If we want to walk, walk no further, unless we want to take our chances going across highways. That is not exactly what the mall had in mind. Indeed, cars cannot always get there from here. It is as if, as we get to the Kennedy Center, it was made for cars, not people, and not even for the arts.

Remember that the John F. Kennedy Center really reminds us of two great presidents. The notion of a cultural arts center began with President Eisenhower. Ultimately, when it was built, it was named for the martyred President Kennedy, so it bears the imprimatur of two great presidents and it inspires this body in a bipartisan fashion to move forward to try to complete it even as generation after generation moves forward with the mall to complete it or to make sure that it remains a mall and remains in many ways clear.

The Congressional commitment to the plaza and to the center has been clear, as the ranking member indicated, since Chairman Shuster was the chair of the committee. And, therefore, I am sure he would take special pride that we are moving forward with it today.

This is a cultural center with no bus service; cabs have a hard time getting in and stopping; no metro; cut off from its neighborhoods along the riverfront except one cannot get to the riverfront from the center; isolated from everything around it. The very opposite of what a cultural center is supposed to be. We are going to fix that.

I appreciate that the bill incorporates the District of Columbia, which has the air rights, and the mayor and I have spoken about those rights. There will be no problem getting whatever is necessary to make sure that the many air rights are, in fact, dealt with.

The central feature of the mall will be a pedestrian plaza over a deck. It will transform the Kennedy Center itself. It will mean that our constituents who come in very large numbers, and increasingly so now that everyone understands that the capital of the United States is the safest city in the world, better protected than any city in the world, as the visitors come, they will be the first to understand that there has been a transformation in this city, that the city is being completed, that the mall itself is being extended, and that we are opening the cultural life physically and in every other way to the world and especially to our country.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and to remain with us until we see this plaza rise, and perhaps Members of Congress will be the first to walk down the plaza and invite people from all around the world to come to a cultural arts center made for the world and where the world can now come and walk and see and have the kind of access that was always intended.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) for her very thoughtful, as always, constructive and scholarly presentation and I am particularly touched by the gentlewoman's reference to the mall as perpetual, yet evolving.

The arts, more than the Kennedy Center, the arts are perpetual. They are what lift a Nation's spirits.

□ 1445

I think history records more what our poets and our composers have to say than what our generals have to do. We, especially in the aftermath of September 11, need the arts to lift our spirits and to design the future and to refocus our aspirations. Kennedy Center is part of that. It was one of the very first cultural institutions in the United States to have a response in art form to the events of September 11, and just as important as it is to make the Kennedy Center accessible as the National Cultural Performing Arts Center to all those 20 million plus visitors who come to this Nation's capital, it also must be accessible to the residents of the District of Columbia themselves, and connecting the Kennedy Center through this plaza to monumental Washington will make it far more attractive and far more available to the residents of the District of Columbia themselves, and that is my fond hope.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to thank my colleagues the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for their very moving tributes to the Kennedy Center and also to the beloved District of Columbia. I appreciate their hard work on this.

I too believe the Kennedy Center is a jewel of our District of Columbia, and to have access to the arts, the very vibrant programs that are brought there daily, not only to the citizens of the District and those of us who are here on a regular basis, but for the many, many visitors I think is a wonderful project that will make generations to come be able to enjoy all the many fine programs that the Kennedy Center has put forth now and in the future.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I first wish to thank Chairman LATOURETTE for lending his support and providing leadership for this bill. Also Chairman YOUNG and Ranking Member OBERSTAR, trustees of the Kennedy Center, have worked to establish broad bi-partisan support for the bill.

This bill will authorize the Department of Transportation, the Government of the District of Columbia, and the Board of Trustees of the John F. Kennedy Center to enter into agreements to conduct environmental planning, provide designs, and execute plans to improve pedestrian, vehicular, and bicycle access to the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

The Kennedy Center is currently isolated from the surrounding city and its physical setting is inconsistent with its mission. A report authorized by TEA-21 identified a number of conditions that impede access to the Presidential memorial. There is no access from the east for pedestrian, vehicles, or bicycles, the pedestrian link to the Metro is too far away and poorly signed, pedestrian and bicycle traffic from the south must cross hazardous roadways, very poor vehicular connections exist between the freeway and the Rock Creek Parkway, and a complicated series of ramps and exits exist to the south of the Center.

The study recommends a series of improvements to remedy the access problem. The centerpiece of these improvements is a proposed plaza, which will be atop a deck over the Potomac Freeway. This deck would provide a new public space and stately approach to the Center from the east. E St. and 25th St. would connect to the plaza, thus reestablishing the local street grid. To the north of the Center new connections would be built between Rock Creek and the Potomac Freeway in the vicinity of K St. Overall, hazardous and congested traffic conditions would be relieved.

The Board of Trustees of the Center has committed to raising private funds to construct the building to be constructed on the plaza.

Currently the plan calls for two buildings for the plaza. One building would be used as rehearsal space, classrooms, and for administrative offices. It is expected the second structure could house and display musical artifacts currently stored at the Library of Congress and the Smithsonian.

I support H.R. 5012 and again extend my thanks to the Committee leadership for their encouragement and support.

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5012.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5012, the bill just considered by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

(2) AVAILABILITY.—Funds appropriated under paragraph (1) shall remain available until expended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1070, the Great Lakes Legacy Act of 2002. H.R. 1070 reflects a consensus approach to addressing sediment contamination in the Great Lakes.

The Great Lakes are, without question, a vital resource for both the United States and Canada. The Great Lakes system provides a waterway to move goods; water supply for drinking, industrial and agricultural purposes; a source of hydroelectric power; and swimming and many other recreational activities.

The industrialization and development of the Great Lakes Basin over the past 200 years has had an adverse impact on the Great Lakes. As a result, many of the Great Lakes are under fish advisories warning people not to eat fish that may be in the water there.

By treaty, the United States and Canada are developing cleanup plans for the Great Lakes and for specific areas of concern. Unfortunately, only one area of concern, located in Canada, has been cleaned up. Most of the activity at U.S. areas of concern has occurred as a result of Superfund enforcement action or threat of such action.

However, Superfund's suitability for cleaning up the Great Lakes is limited.

The Great Lakes sediments became contaminated as a result of pollution from many sources over several generations. Applying Superfund could make virtually every citizen of the Great Lakes Basin a liable party.

There are better ways to address this problem. One solution is to encourage cooperative efforts through public-private partnerships. That is the solution recommended by the bill H.R. 1070, the Great Lakes Legacy Act of 2002.

H.R. 1070 would authorize $50 million a year for 5 years to clean up contaminated sediment in areas of concern in the Great Lakes. This Federal funding must be matched with at least a 35 percent non-Federal share, encouraging local and private sector investment. This bill also makes sure that these funds are well spent.

At some sites, removing sediments will be the best way to address short- and long-term risks. At other sites, the last thing we want to do is go in and stir up contaminated sediments by dredging, causing even more harm to the environment.

This consensus bill does not try to presume any particular cleanup option. It simply encourages stakeholders to take action and to make sure that the action they take will make a real improvement to human health and the environment.

I want to commend the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and his colleagues for working with stakeholders from the Great Lakes to advance this legislation. I believe this is a great example of bipartisan legislation that everyone in this Chamber can support. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) for his splendid statement and full discussion of the subject at hand and for his leadership and, as always, bipartisan cooperation in bringing this legislation to the floor today.

I also want to acknowledge the support and cooperation of our chairman of the full committee the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and seeing to it that we move this bill expeditiously through subcommittee, full committee and to the floor today.

There is no question this bill is a long time in coming, and it should, when enacted and implemented, bring to fruition the long-planned and sort of haltingly carried out efforts to clean up decades-long contamination of this repository of one-fifth of all the fresh water on the face of the Earth, the Great Lakes.

It has been my home all my life, living not on the shore but close enough to the shore of Lake Superior, my hometown of Chisholm just about 90 miles away. I spent a great deal of my time as a young lad near the shores of Lake Superior and my service in the Congress, my District extends from Duluth all the way up to Canada, along that splendid rocky outcrop of the 3 billion year old deposits of basalt that look broodingly out onto Lake Superior, which represents 10 percent of the fresh water on the face of the Earth.

My predecessor Congressman John Blatnik was the original author of the first Clean Water Act, Federal Water Pollution Control Act of 1956 that began the Nation's efforts to clean up the waters of the United States and was the one who inspired the research laboratories that now are located throughout the Great Lakes to serve as a beacon for the protection, beacon out on those fresh waters to serve as the protection for the future generations of the Great Lakes, on the purity and quality of those waters.

In years past, when I chaired the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight, I held extensive hearings on the United States-Canada Clean Water Agreement to push administrations in the past to action on cleanup of the toxic hot spots, or areas of concern as they are called. It is just an unspeakable tragedy that nearly 100 percent of the near shore waters of the Great Lakes and connecting tributaries are under fish consumption advisories because those fish have taken up toxics from bottom feeding organisms, from plants, carried them in their bodies and then are consumed by humans. It was presented in documented testimony in the hearings that I held in the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight and corroborated since then in subsequent hearings. The chairman has conducted a few.

If a person lives within 20 miles of the Great Lakes and they eat fish once a week, they have on average 440 parts per billion PCBs in their body. If they live anywhere else in America and eat fish once a week, they probably have only 5 parts per billion per PCBs in their body. I need not go into the adverse health consequences of PCBs. They are well-documented in the medical and scientific literature.

We had a researcher, Dr. Waylon Swain, from the University of Michigan testify at the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight hearing who had done tests on his 16-year-old daughter of the fatty tissue in her body and the content of PCBs and then did a computer projection to determine how long it would take for future generations, for PCBs to leave her offspring if none of them were exposed in the future to PCBs. Six generations. This is a persistent toxic chemical that we need to extract from the bottoms of those areas of concern.

Of the 43 areas of concern of the Great Lakes, 31 are wholly or partly within U.S. waters, and they are mostly harbors. More than 1.3 million in cubic yards of contaminated sediments have been remediated over the past 3 years. We have just touched the top of the challenge, and remediation is nowhere near completed in any one of the areas of concern.

The people of the Great Lakes community, 36 million of them, have lived with this problem that threatens their physical health, the health of their children, and impacts the entire region, both economically and in degradation of the Great Lakes environment.

I was heartened when former President Clinton in fiscal 2000 included within the administration's budget a request for $50 million for remediation of contaminated sediments, and I had at the time introduced H.R. 3670 to authorize a program for cleanup of the Great Lakes areas of concern, but neither the bill nor the $50 million came to fruition. But the initiatives then stimulated further attention.

I am very delighted to acknowledge the work of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), who is a colleague of ours on the Committee of Transportation and Infrastructure, whose scientific mind and appreciation of the challenges has brought considerable expertise and passion for cleaning up these waters to this issue, and I compliment the gentleman for introducing the bill today before us which will authorize $50 million annually for the Environmental Protection Agency to carry out projects to address sediment contamination in the Great Lakes areas of concern.

These are going to be prioritized projects. Priority will be given to those that actively address the contaminated sediments that have been identified in the remedial action plans for the areas of concern, projects that promise to implement innovative approaches, new technologies and new techniques to deal with contaminated sediment so as not to, as Chairman DUNCAN expressed concern, reintroduce contaminants into the water column and thereby reestablish the pollution or distribute it further.

One of these innovative approaches is one that has been undertaken by the U.S. environmental research laboratory of EPA in Duluth, the University of Minnesota's Natural Resources Research Institute and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in the harbor of Duluth, using mining technologies which we in the iron ore mining country of my district use to beneficiate low-grade, nonmagnetic ores using a process that has a cost in the range of $2 to $3 a cubic yard versus $400 to $600 a cubic yard for other technologies, have successfully remediated large volumes of toxic-substance-containing sediment so that this cleansed sediment now can be used in parks and reclaiming areas along the waterfront in Duluth for other environmentally friendly activities.

These are the kinds of innovative approaches this legislation will support and stimulate in the future. The legislation before us also has clarifying language to ensure that the new program will have no effect on existing Federal and State authorities to address contaminated sites. The IJC report recently found that all sediment remediation completed to date has been funded as a result of enforcement action, or the threat of enforcement action, against polluters. While that still would remain, we would hope ideally that there would be a cooperative approach to cleanup. The aptly named "orphan sites" will be one of the targets of this legislation. I expect EPA and the States to continue to pursue and to hold accountable polluters responsible for contamination of all the areas of concern.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for his persistence in pursuing this issue, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) for his diligence in bringing the legislation forward, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) for his participation, and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFazio) for his active support on our side as the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), the original author of the bill.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Great Lakes Legacy Act of 2002. First, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN), the chairman of the subcommittee; and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member of the full committee, for their kind comments and for the help that they have given me in getting this bill to this point, particularly not just in terms of process but also in substance, in the advice I have received.

America is often called the land of plenty, especially when it comes to our natural resources. Few places on Earth are more blessed than we are, and the Great Lakes stand out among our many blessings. I am pleased to be the author of this legislation because it will protect this precious resource, our Great Lakes.

Let me describe just how important the Great Lakes are, both to citizens within the Great Lakes basin and to the country as a whole. The Great Lakes constitute almost 20 percent of the Earth's surface fresh water and 95 percent of the surface fresh water in the United States. Let me repeat that: 95 percent of the surface fresh water in the United States. That means if you take all the waters of the United States, starting first with the rivers, the Hudson River and working west, the Ohio, the magnificent Mississippi, the Missouri, Arkansas, Colorado, Snake and Columbia, and you could name many more, add them all together and then put in all the other lakes in the United States and collect all that surface fresh water together in one spot, then you would still have to multiply that by almost 20 to equal the amount of water in the Great Lakes system. That is an incredible resource. It is an incredibly wonderful thing to have.

These lakes provide us with fresh drinking water, habitat for wildlife, food from fisheries, recreation in and on the waterways, water for agriculture, and shipping lanes for economic growth. Millions of people live on the Great Lakes and millions more journey to the Great Lakes to vacation and enjoy all the splendors the lakes provide.

However, longstanding pollution from contaminated river sediments continues to harm water quality in the Great Lakes and restricts our use of this valuable resource. As we heard from the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the fish have become contaminated with the toxic material, particularly the PCBs. The waterfowl that eat the fish have in turn become more contaminated. And then, of course, the humans who eat the fish and occasionally the waterfowl collect it all and become even more contaminated.

After many years of dumping harmful, toxic substances into the waterways surrounding the Great Lakes and the lakes themselves, the pristine environment and waters of the Great Lakes have suffered. Cleanup projects have been implemented at only a portion of the so-called areas of concern identified by the EPA as the worst of the contaminated sites. Let me just explain what these areas of concern are. That is kind of a euphemistic phrase in my mind. What it is describing is dirty, toxic, polluted sediments at the bottom of the rivers. This material is slowly leaching into the Great Lakes.

Years ago we cleaned up our rivers on the surface. We cleaned up the obvious pollution, the things you could see floating down the river. Many of us recall the days when the Cuyahoga River in Cleveland caught fire and rats ran across the river, it was so contaminated. When I moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan, the Grand River, which runs right through the city, was polluted enough that you would not think of swimming in there; and you did not want to eat the fish in it. We have made progress in cleaning up the obvious pollution. Today, the Cuyahoga River is a reasonably clean river. The Grand River in Grand Rapids is so clean that people fish constantly and eat the fish without difficulty, and some people even swim in the river now.

However, what we have not addressed is the problem of the sediments, what is at the bottom of the river. We have not addressed this for several reasons. First of all, we did not know how to address it, because if you simply dredge it, you stir up all the sediments and the contamination just flows down into the lake. So we needed to know more about how to do it. But also there was a hope that the toxic material would just stay there in the sediments and not move and we could just leave it there and ignore it. We have now found out that we cannot ignore it. It is steadily leaching into the Great Lakes, and we must stop it and we have to develop methods to do it.

One of the biggest obstacles to completing a remedial action plan, or a cleanup plan, is the funding for it. Community groups, States, the EPA, and the Army Corps of Engineers have all committed to remediation efforts and have cited the lack of Federal funding as an impediment to cleaning up areas of concern in communities that have taken the initiative to improve the quality of their water. It is time that we helped them clean up these sites.

Existing authorities and programs such as Superfund and other enforcement mechanisms have not provided the resources that are necessary to clean up contaminated sediments. We must provide the EPA administrator with authority and with authorized appropriations to carry out qualified projects in areas of concern that require cleanup and are not likely to suffer further contamination. We must take steps to monitor and clean up contaminated sediment and prevent further or renewed contamination. In addition, we must pursue research and development of innovative approaches and technology to help us learn how to remove contaminated sediment in the most environmentally safe and efficient manner. The Great Lakes Legacy Act helps accomplish these goals.

Finally, this act is not only environmentally responsible; it is also fiscally responsible. The act provides leveraged funding and fosters partnerships between State and local authorities and private interests by requiring a 35 percent non-Federal cost share. In addition, non-Federal sponsors are prevented from using Federal funds to displace previous expenditures for remediation programs. In other words, with a 65-35 split, we will get a greater environmental bang for our Federal buck.

The Great Lakes Legacy Act will greatly improve cleanup efforts in the Great Lakes communities which need it most and will allow unfettered, continued use of this precious natural resource. I thank the chairman and the ranking member for their assistance. I appreciate their support of this bill.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I have no further speakers on our side, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Let me just close the debate by saying there is almost nothing that people take for granted as much as they do their water. Yet many people have said and have written that water may well be the oil of the 21st century. The importance of our water supply is going to grow and grow and grow with the passing years. Certainly the Great Lakes, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) just said, is a precious national resource. The Great Lakes contain, as the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has said, almost one-fifth of the world's freshwater supply. The Great Lakes contain 95 percent of the U.S. surface freshwater supply. The Great Lakes is a very, very important asset.

This is a good bill. This is a very pro-environment bill. The lack of controversy should not mask or decrease or cover up the significance of this bill, the importance of it. I think this is one of the most significant clean-water bills that this Congress has ever passed. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Let me say one other thing before I yield back my time. I just want to commend the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS). The gentleman from Minnesota is certainly always one of the most active members of our committee and a real leader on all of these issues, and I thank him for his support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I thank the gentleman not only for his kind remarks but also for his very thoughtful summation. In his ever-judicious manner, he has summed up the issue before us and stated the case so well. I not only urge unanimous approval of the legislation in this body, but I also urge the other body to move expeditiously on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The Chair would remind all Members that they should refrain from urging the Senate to take a specific action.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Great Lakes Legacy Act, H.R. 1070.

I would like to commend my colleague and friend from Michigan, Congressman VERN EHLERS for crafting this important legislation and for his diligence in gathering the appropriate support. As a cosponsor of the Great Lakes Legacy Act, I am extremely pleased that the Great Lakes region is one step closer to cleaning up toxic hot spots that lurk under the world's largest freshwater system.

While globally there are 42 Areas of Concern (AOC), that is, areas that suffer from severe sediment contamination, 26 are located in the United States, and in my state of Michigan there are 14 designated AOCs. Contamination levels in these areas threaten human health, contribute to the loss of fish and wildlife habitat, restrict critical dredging activities, and lead to numerous beach closings. AOCs are among Michigan's most demanding environmental challenge.

Like other environmental clean-up programs, full remediation of Great Lakes AOCs continues to be bogged down by a burdensome web of complex regulations, lack of necessary funding, and insufficient progress of research and development into new technologies. Recognizing these obstacles, the legislation we are considering today aims to solve the problems that plague successful clean-up efforts.

In short, H.R. 1070 addresses the most costly and technical hurdles that face these hazardous hot spots. More specifically, this legislation authorizes funding for States, Indian tribes, regional agencies, and local governments for projects in AOCs to monitor or evaluate contaminated sediment and remediate contaminated sediments. It also targets funding for research and development of new technologies that aim to clean toxic sediments in the Great Lakes basin.

My support for this legislation goes beyond my co-sponsorship of the measure. In March I introduced a resolution, House Resolution 361. H.Res. 361 calls on the House of Representatives to take swift action in helping to restore and protect Michigan's Great Lakes, the state's most precious natural resource. My bill highlights the environmental problems associated with AOCs and includes the goals set forth in the Great Lakes Legacy Act. In my view, the work done by my colleague from Michigan on this subject is too important for the Congress to let slip. My resolution affirms the importance of passing H.R. 1070 in an expeditious manner equal to its relevance for helping clean the world's largest source of freshwater.

Let me make this point clear, the environmental problems that are caused by AOCs are not just a Michigan issue. Although most Areas of Concern in the United States are concentrated in Michigan, it is a national and international problem. Its risks for human health, aquatic populations, ecological habitats and wildlife are serious and impact states beyond Michigan. Therefore, it would be unwise for the Congress to ignore this issue or delay its consideration any further.

Mr. Speaker, again, I am pleased to lend my full support for the Great Lakes Legacy Act and urge my colleagues to do the same. With that Mr. Speaker, I yield back the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1070, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to authorize the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to carry out projects and conduct research for remediation of sediment contamination in areas of concern in the Great Lakes, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1070.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

JOSEPH CURSEEN, JR. AND THOMAS MORRIS, JR. PROCESSING AND DISTRIBUTION CENTER

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3287) to redesignate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 900 Brentwood Road, NE, in Washington, D.C., as the "Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center".

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3287

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. JOSEPH CURSEEN, JR. AND THOMAS MORRIS, JR. PROCESSING AND DISTRIBUTION CENTER.

(a) REDESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 900 Brentwood Road, NE, in Washington, D.C., and known as the Brentwood Processing and Distribution Center, shall be known and designated as the "Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3287, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3287, introduced by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN), our distinguished colleague, designates the Brentwood Processing and Distribution Center in Washington, D.C., as the Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr., Processing and Distribution Center. I am very proud to have my name as a cosponsor and original sponsor of this bill also.

Mr. Speaker, today we honor two public servants who died in the line of duty. Thomas Morris and Joseph Curseen did not know when they reported to the Brentwood Processing and Distribution Center last October that they were on the front lines of the war against terrorism. But they were struck down by anthrax which infected the facility when an anonymous terrorist sent envelopes containing spores to Washington.

Both had distinguished careers at the Brentwood Road facility. Curseen began his career with the postal service in 1985 as a letter-sorting machine operator. Morris, an Air Force veteran, began work at the facility in 1973. Both men were born and raised in Washington, D.C., and their deaths shocked the Washington area, the postal community, and the entire Nation. It is fitting to name the building where they served their country after these two distinguished public servants. And so, Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 3287.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach the 1-year period following the attacks on our country, I rise to support a bill of special significance to honor two native sons of the District of Columbia who as public servants gave their lives while serving this city, this region, and this country. H.R. 3287 would redesignate the United States Postal Service facility located at 900 Brentwood Road, Northeast, in Washington, D.C. as the Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr., Processing and Distribution Center.

I want to thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN), who represents the district where Joseph Curseen and Thomas Morris resided, for his leadership in introducing H.R. 3287, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Civil Service, Census and Agency Organization, who is also my colleague on the subcommittee, for his hard work in bringing this bill to the floor and for generously deferring to me to manage the bill. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of H.R. 3287.

This month our Nation is struggling for ways to reflect upon and appropriately commemorate the tragic events that began with the attack on September 11, 2001. Today we remember October 21 and October 22, 2001, because on these consecutive days, we lost two brave men to the anthrax attack on our country.

Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr., were both family men and pillars of their communities. They were known for their dedicated hard work on the job as postal employees whose colleagues have still not forgotten them. They were loved by their families, who still deeply miss them. We are pleased that Celeste Curseen and Mary Morris, the widows of the two men, are in the gallery today.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind Members that they may not refer to individuals in the gallery.

Ms. NORTON. Many of us will always remember Joseph Curseen and Thomas Morris as Washingtonians because it is in this city that they were born and raised and received the values and the work ethic for which they are so fondly remembered.

Joseph Curseen, Jr., was born in Washington, D.C. in 1954. He graduated from Our Lady of Perpetual Help Grammar School in Southeast Washington and then went on to graduate from Gonzaga High School and Marquette University. Beginning in 1985, Mr. Curseen was a letter-sorting machine operator in the U.S. Postal Service, working evenings at the Brentwood Road facility on machines that processed government mail. Not once in those 15 years did Joseph Curseen miss a day of work.

Mr. Curseen was a man of faith who never left his home church here in the District. He led a bible study group at work and was a Eucharistic Minister at our Lady of Perpetual Help Roman Catholic Church until his death.

Mr. Curseen was not only dedicated to his work, but also to his community, where he served as president of his local homeowners' association. He instituted a neighborhood watch program and assisted in building a playground for the neighborhood children. He looked for ways large and small to improve his community, such as the petition he organized that resulted in speed bumps on the streets of his community to protect his neighbors from irresponsible drivers.

Thomas L. Morris, Jr., was born on March 2, 1946, also in Washington, D.C., and he got his education in public schools of the District of Columbia. He began his career with the U.S. Postal Service in 1973 as a distribution clerk in the government mails section at Brentwood. During his postal career Mr. Morris was honored four times for outstanding performance and with service awards.

Mr. Speaker, naming post offices is a common practice in this body, but renaming Brentwood carries special meaning, both symbolic and pragmatic. Brentwood has remained closed since the anthrax attacks last October. Yet in the not too distant future, Brentwood will reopen. When it does, it must be a new Brentwood. When workers walk back into that facility, every aspect of the reopening should signify that this is Brentwood reborn.

Brentwood not only will be fumigated, sanitized and refurbished, it should be Brentwood no more. Its new name will signify a new beginning, a mission that needs our attention. Many postal workers are still, understandably, reluctant to return to Brentwood. In naming the facility for Joseph Curseen and Thomas Morris, we can hope that their fellow workers will feel more resolved and more comfortable as they return.

The Subcommittee on the District of Columbia, on which I serve as ranking member, already has held one hearing on the remediation of the Brentwood facility. At that hearing I asked the Centers for Disease Control to conduct an epidemiological study to compare the health of the workers from Brentwood with the health of workers who did not work in a contaminated facility so that we can follow and know if there are any longer-term effects. The CDC has agreed to do this study, and, in addition, is following the health condition of those who worked at the facility.

The Postal Service has agreed that, at the very least, the same degree of extreme care that was used in cleaning the Hart Building, also struck by the anthrax attacks, will be used to decontaminate Brentwood. I also have proposed that we hold another hearing before Brentwood is reopened to reassure the public and postal employees that every possible step has been taken to ensure their safety.

Following the tragic deaths of these two men, we must do whatever is necessary and appropriate to eliminate the deep concerns many employees still have about returning to the Brentwood facility. As one way to show our commitment to a safe facility, I propose that the Postmaster General, postal, union and elected officials be the first to enter the facility.

I also believe that renaming Brentwood to honor Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr., will help accomplish what no amount of reassurance could possibly do. Their names will forever rest on the building to remind employees, visitors and the Nation that we must not forget two brave fallen heroes, whose example at work should inspire us to press forward, unbowed and without fear.

I urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Civil Service.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Government Reform, I am pleased to join my colleagues in consideration of H.R. 3287, which redesignates the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 900 Brentwood Road, Northeast, in Washington, D.C., as the Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr., Processing and Distribution Center.

This bill was sponsored by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN) on November 13, 2001, and enjoys the support and cosponsorship of the entire Maryland delegation, as well as the support of the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE).

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to note the dignity, grace and spirit of cooperation that has been displayed by Ms. Celeste Curseen, wife of Mr. Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Ms. Mary Morris, wife of Mr. Thomas Morris, Jr., as well as Mr. William Burris, President of the American Postal Workers Union, as we have moved to process this legislation.

As the Chairman of the Congressional Postal Caucus, I am proud to honor two dedicated postal workers, Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr., both of whom died as a result of a bioterrorist anthrax attack on the United States postal system. This attack changed the fabric of American society. Let me recount the facts.

The U.S. Postal Service Brentwood Processing and Distribution Center in the District of Columbia, a 632,000 square foot facility, was closed on October 21, 2001, because of anthrax contamination. Anthrax-laced letters addressed to Senators TOM DASCHLE and PATRICK LEAHY in their Senate offices had been processed at the Brentwood facility. Approximately 2,400 employees worked at this facility, including Joseph Curseen, Jr., and Thomas Morris, Jr.

On October 21, 2001, Thomas Morris, Jr., died of inhalation anthrax. The following day, his colleague, Joseph Curseen, Jr., also died of inhalation anthrax. As of today, law enforcement officials have not found and brought to justice the perpetrators of these cowardly acts, and the Brentwood facility remains closed.

It is unfortunate that we were introduced to Thomas Morris, Jr., and Joseph Curseen, Jr., as a result of their deaths.

However, by renaming the Brentwood Postal Facility after these 2 individuals, we will be creating a lasting memorial to their lives, and we will be re-creating a lasting memorial, because they were both exemplary citizens, citizens who gave so much of themselves, not for themselves, but oftentimes for the benefit of others, individuals who were model citizens, model husbands, model fathers, involved actively in their communities and in the lives of others, involved in their church, involved with doing those things that we raise up in this country.

So when we name this facility for them, we are not really naming it for them, but we are really naming it for the best of what America has to offer, and that is ordinary people doing extraordinary things.

So, Mr. Speaker, I again want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN) for introducing this legislation, and I urge its passage, and I commend the lives of these 2 great citizens.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN), the principal sponsor of this legislation.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia for yielding me this time, and I thank all of my colleagues in the region, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON), as I have indicated, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), and also the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) and other Members for supporting me in this legislation.

I rise today in support of this bill honoring, as the Washington Post simply put it, "Two Men Who Were Just Doing Their Jobs." My bill, H.R. 3287, redesignates the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 900 Brentwood Road, N.E. in Washington, D.C. as the Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center. This facility was the site of the deadly anthrax contamination that resulted from a letter en route to Members of the United States Senate.

I am particularly pleased that the wives of these 2 men, Ms. Curseen and Ms. Morris, are able to see this day as a small measure of compensation for the loss that they have suffered.

If my colleagues would indulge me, I would like to tell a little bit about these gentlemen. Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. were like thousands of other hard-working, dedicated Federal employees who came to work every day and quietly went about their daily duties, keeping the wheels of our government turning. However, unlike many of our Federal employees, in October of 2001, the hand of fate wearing the mask of terror touched these two young men. They died as a result of anthrax sent through the mail that was intended for our colleagues.

First, Joseph P. Curseen, Jr. was born in Washington, D.C. in 1954, the only son of Billie and Joseph P. Curseen, Sr., and big brother to Joan Jackson and Janice Curseen. He was a graduate of Our Lady of Perpetual Help Grammar School, Gonzaga High School, and Marquette University. In 1985 he married his beautiful wife, Celestine.

Joseph was a quiet, warm, and fun-loving man. He was an active, respected community leader who was founder and served as President of his neighborhood homeowners association. He served his spiritual community as a eucharistic minister at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Roman Catholic Church, as a Bible study leader at work, as a Promise Keepers participant, and as a true servant of God. At work, Joe's quiet dedication and professionalism set an outstanding example for others in the service of our Nation.

Joseph joined the Postal Service family in 1985, following in his father's footsteps. His assignments may have changed over the years, first to the flat sorting machine and then to automation, but his personality and inspiration were always solid anchors for those he worked with.

Joseph P. Curseen, Jr.'s legacy is one of love for his God, for his wife, for his family, for his church, for his community, and for his coworkers.

Thomas L. Morris, Jr. was born in Washington, D.C. in 1946, the first of three children born to Eva and Thomas Lee Earl Morris. He has two sisters, Yvonne Hankerson and Sheila Howard. Educated in the public schools of the District of Columbia, he continued to learn and teach throughout every day of his life. For 11 years, Thomas was married to his wife Mary, and to their union was born one son, Thomas L. Morris III. They also shared two stepchildren, Tara Underwood and Akai Snorten, and three grandchildren.

Thomas was a kind and private man. He shared his emotions fully and happily with those who were closest to him. He derived great pleasure from the warmth of his loving family. One of his passions was bowling, where he served as President of the Tuesday Morning Mixed League at Parkland Bowl. Thomas was faithful to his church, Kendall Baptist. He was dedicated to his country and served honorably in the United States Air Force for more than 4 years. His choice of more than a 30-year career with the Postal Service was further reflection of his commitment to serving the people of our Nation.

Starting his postal career as a government mail distribution clerk in 1973, Thomas' varied assignments took him through other tours and sections at the Brentwood facility, including a promotion to general expeditor. Just 3 years ago, Thomas's duties took him full circle, with a return to the government mail section. During the course of his distinguished career, he was honored on four occasions with outstanding performance and service awards.

Thomas L. Morris led a life marked by devotion to his family, his friends, and his coworkers. He shared the lessons he learned with those he knew and loved and learned life's lessons from all he came in contact with.

These two dedicated Federal employees have been honored by their leaders and coworkers with the Postmaster General's Medal of Freedom. I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring these men today by redesignating the Brentwood Postal Facility in their names.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Today, the representatives of the people of a grateful Nation will vote unanimously to honor Thomas Morris, Jr. and Joseph Curseen, Jr. We will do that by designating the Brentwood Postal Facility in their honor and in their names.

Not too long ago, we renamed the headquarters of the Capitol Police for three Capitol Policemen that we lost at the hand of a terrorist, J.J. Chestnut, John Gibson, and Christopher Eney. Today, we do another appropriate act. We will rise together to recognize, as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois observed, average Americans doing very uncommon things. Not only will we honor Mr. Morris and Mr. Curseen, but we will honor their colleagues as well. We will honor indeed all of those who day-to-day, week-to-week, month-to-month and year-to-year perform their tasks courageously, conscientiously, effectively. They do so so that America can function. Frankly, every day America relies on the United States Postal Service. It relies on it for commerce, it relies on it for family ties, it relies on it for information. Joseph Curseen and Thomas Morris made sure that happened.

After their deaths in October of 2001, I had the opportunity of attending their memorial service, and at that service I met their wives, Celestine Curseen and Mary Morris. I did not know either Joe or Tom, but I met their wives. And I can tell from them and the strong feelings they have for those they have lost the kind of men, not only that they have lost, not only that the Postal Service has lost, but that we as a Nation have lost, two extraordinary women in shared grief.

Today we share their grief and we share their pride. We share their pride in those two men and in their colleagues.

I visited the D.C. General Hospital, which was the site of the postal workers coming and being advised as to the risks they faced, the health consequences that might occur, and the prophylactic that they could take. I went down the line of those who were waiting for advice and counsel and I saw the courage and the conviction in their eyes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The Chair would inform the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia that she has 30 seconds remaining.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for yielding me this time.

I saw the courage and conviction in their eyes. It reflected the courage and conviction of Joe and Thomas. It reflected the courage and conviction of their fellow Americans, their fellow citizens. They were not prepared, nor are they now prepared, to let those who would terrorize our institutions or our people flinch, retreat, or cower. It is appropriate that we honor these two men for their courage, for their commitment, and for their contribution to making America the greatest land on the face of the Earth. God blesses America. God blessed America through the lives of Thomas and Joseph.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, could I ask the gentlewoman from Maryland if she would yield me 1 minute to sum up?

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON).

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a slogan I cannot remember entirely that is associated with the Post Office, "through rain or snow or sleet," to describe just how constant is that service. Well, that describes how these men were remembered as unfailing men of the Postal Service. The renaming that we bring forward today is freighted with meaning, most obviously because it is so richly deserved, but the timing of this bill imports far deeper meaning. Hundreds of workers are preparing themselves psychologically to reenter that facility where two of their friends and colleagues died. May they find the reentry easier as they come no longer to the Brentwood Postal Facility, but to the Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, before I yield back the balance of my time, I yield myself such time as I may consume just to say that Thomas Morris' memories will live on through his wife of 11 years, Mary, their son, Thomas, their stepchildren, Tara Underwood, Akai Snorten, their grandchildren, Thomas's two sisters, Yvonne Hankerson and Sheila Howard.

Joseph Curseen's life will be remembered by his wonderful wife of 16 years, Celeste, his parents, Billie and Joseph, his two younger sisters, Joan and Janice. We will also remember them, we will remember them every day.

I offer my deepest condolences to the family members. We can only say that while no medal or plaque or ceremony can truly convey our sadness for those who lost their lives, it is important that we in Congress show the rest of this country and the world how we value their bravery.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5308.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

BARNEY APODACA POST OFFICE

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5308) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 301 South Howes Street in Fort Collins, Colorado, as the "Barney Apodaca Post Office."

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5308

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. BARNEY APODACA POST OFFICE.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 301 South Howes Street in Fort Collins, Colorado, shall be known and designated as the "Barney Apodaca Post Office".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the Barney Apodaca Post Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5308.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5308, introduced by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER), designates the post office in Fort Collins, Colorado, as the Barney Apodaca Post Office Building.

Barney Apodaca, age 60, is a Colorado native. Although he was born developmentally disabled, he has been an inspiration to the people of Fort Collins, Colorado, through his charity work and his service to the community.

In the early 1970s, Barney began participating in the Special Olympics, always seeking opportunities to help others and striving for excellence. He has continually encouraged fellow participants and has been awarded over 30 medals for his outstanding performance in track and field.

Above all, Barney is committed to serving others. Despite his own disabilities, he has spent countless hours raising money to benefit the American Cancer Society, the Muscular Dystrophy Association, AIDSwalk Colorado, Northern Colorado Youth Hockey, and Poudre Valley Hospital.

A talented bowler, Barney has also raised money for individuals in his community with special needs by participating in numerous bowl-a-thons and other fundraising events.

In addition to his work on behalf of charities, Barney has obtained and maintains two, sometimes three, part-time jobs and works diligently for the city of Fort Collins, which has presented him with two awards recognizing his outstanding service to the community.

Barney Apodaca is an exceptional citizen who has dedicated his life to helping improving the quality of life for his community and by reaching out to those in need.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the gentlewoman from Maryland in consideration of H.R. 5308, introduced by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) on July 26, 2002.

Mr. Barney Apodaca is a native of Colorado who is committed to serving his community. As a disabled individual, Mr. Apodaca has been participating in the Special Olympics for more than 30 years. In addition to helping raise awareness for the Special Olympics, he has won more than 30 medals for his outstanding performance in track and field.

As an active member of his community, Mr. Apodaca has been a relentless fundraiser for charitable causes. He has raised money to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy Association, AIDS, the American Cancer Society, and many other deserving causes. He has also worked to assist youth sporting organizations and community hospitals. His charitable works have earned him recognition for outstanding service to the community from the city of Fort Collins.

Mr. Speaker, I urge swift passage of this bill and commend my colleague for seeking to honor citizen Barney Apodaca in this manner, an individual who has given consistently, even though he may have been physically challenged. But he represents what many individuals who have disabilities represent, and that is, the ability to do things not always because of but oftentimes in spite of. I can think of no better way of acknowledging his contribution than passage of this legislation.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, as author of this bill, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5308, a bill designating the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 301 South Howes Street in Fort Collins, Colorado, as the "Barney Apodaca Post Office."

Barney Apodaca is a native Coloradoan who embodies the determination, perseverance and courage that makes our nation great. Born with mental retardation, Barney would not allow his disability to prevent him from achieving success. In 1974, he began participating in the Special Olympics. Since then, he has won over 30 medals for his outstanding performance in a variety of track and field events.

In recent years, Barney has selflessly raised money for a host of charitable causes including Northern Colorado Youth Hockey, the Poudre Valley Hospital, AIDS Walk Colorado, the Muscular Dystrophy Association and the American Cancer Society. As an avid bowler, he has used his skill in the sport to raise money for many of these organizations, as well as for individuals with special needs. Although Barney has no direct ties to any of these organizations, he spends countless hours engaging in charity work because he wants to serve those in need. When asked which group he favors, Barney's response is "all of them."

Beloved by his community, Barney has been named the "Best Local Personality" by the Fort Collins Coloradoan. He has also been presented with two achievement awards for his outstanding service to the City of Ft. Collins.

Barney Apodaca is an inspiration to the people of Colorado. He leads by example, encouraging people to serve others and strive for excellence. His contribution to the City of Ft. Collins is immeasurable, and it gives me great pleasure to recognize his achievements by designating a United States Post Office in his honor.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS E. BURNETT, JR. POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5207) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the "Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building."

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5207

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. THOMAS E. BURNETT, JR. POST OFFICE BUILDING.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, shall be known and designated as the “Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building”.

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5207.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5207, introduced by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD), designates the postal facility located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building.

Tom Burnett grew up in the Minnesota-St. Paul suburb of Bloomington in the district of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD). He woke up on the morning of September 11, 2001, and headed to Newark International for a morning flight. Tom was returning home to San Ramon, California, following a business meeting in New Jersey. He boarded United Flight 93 bound for San Francisco, settled into seat 4C, and prepared for the nearly 3,000-mile flight.

Almost 1 hour into Flight 93's journey, the plane turned around. Shortly thereafter, Tom called his wife Deena and told her that his plane had been taken over by four men. Tom told his wife that he and two other passengers were determined to do something to take Flight 93 back.

Tom's wife replied that planes had already crashed into the World Trade Center towers and the Pentagon that morning. Tom Burnett and a few other passengers of Flight 93 overpowered the terrorists and crashed the plane into a field near Shanksville, Pennsylvania. The hijacked plane, apparently headed for Washington, may have been on its way to crashing into this very building, this very building.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate our esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD), for introducing this measure that honors Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Tom Burnett was a man who personified the American virtues of humility and bravery. I urge all Members of this House to support the adoption of H.R. 5207.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5207, to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building, was introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD) on July 24, 2002.

As an American hero, Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. was a passenger on board the hijacked United Airlines Flight 93 that crashed outside of Pittsburgh on September 11, 2001.

Thomas Burnett was among a group of passengers who decided to take action against the terrorists who had hijacked Flight 93 with plans to crash the plane in Washington, D.C.

Who was Mr. Burnett? He was 38 and a resident of San Ramon, California, the senior vice president and chief operating officer of Thoratec Corporation, a medical research and development company; husband to Mrs. Deena Burnett; father of three young girls: Madison, Halley, and Anna-Clair; the son of Thomas and Beverly Burnett, Sr.; and brother to Martha O'Brien and Mary Margaret Burnett.

He was also a man of character who was able to contact his wife during the terrible journey of Flight 93 and let her know that, and I quote, “A group of us are going to do something,” and something they did. That something was to make sure the hijackers did not hit a populated area.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Burnett and others made a very heroic stand on September 11, 2001. Together they took control of the plane and saved many, many lives. They demonstrated leadership and courage, and deserve to be recognized.

Accordingly, I urge the swift passage of this bill and commend my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD), for seeking to honor Mr. THOMAS E. BURNETT, JR., in this manner. He exemplified the thought and the action that “If it is to be, let it begin with me.”

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD), the introducer of this legislation.

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), for yielding time to me, for her assistance with this legislation, and also for her kind tribute to Tom Burnett, Jr.

I also thank my friend, the gentleman from Illinois, (Mr. DAVIS), for his tribute to Tom Burnett, Jr., and for his assistance with this legislation as well.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a true American hero. The legislation before us, H.R. 5207, would rename the West Bloomington, Minnesota, post office in my district in honor of Bloomington native Thomas E. Burnett, Jr., a true American hero.

I want to express my appreciation also to the chairman and my friend, the gentleman from Indiana, and my friend, the ranking member, the gentleman from California, as well as the majority leader, my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY), for allowing this bill to come to the floor so expeditiously so that we can pass it by September 11.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced this legislation at the request of Bloomington Mayor Gene Winstead and the Bloomington City Council, which unanimously passed a resolution of support.

Most of us know the story of Tom Burnett, Jr., who was on board United Flight 93 when it was hijacked by the terrorists on September 11. Tom, as the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) explained, was able to reach his wife, Deena, on his cell phone and told her, “We’ve got to do something. I know we are all going to die. There are three of us who are going to do something about it.”

Led by Tom Burnett, Jr., the passengers aboard United Flight 93 showed tremendous courage in taking on the evil terrorists who intended to kill as many Americans as possible. As we all know, that plane crashed in Pennsylvania, instead of hitting the terrorists’ intended target of this building, the United States Capitol, according to FBI Director Mueller.

□ 1600

We all owe a deep debt of gratitude to Tom Burnett, Jr., and the other brave Americans on Flight 93. Tom Burnett was not even originally scheduled to be on that fateful flight, I might add. And I will never forget the words at Tom's funeral mass of long-time Burnett family friend, Father Joe Slepicka, who said, “Ancient history tells us God seems to call the right people in the right time and place to do the right things for the good of others.”

Mr. Speaker, God called Tom Burnett, Jr., and Tom did the right thing for the good of others.

Tom Burnett grew up in Bloomington, Minnesota, the son of Thomas and Beverly Burnett, Sr. He was the quarterback of the Thomas Jefferson High School football team and led his team to the State championship game in 1980. Tom married Deena in 1992 and they have three beautiful children, Madison, Halley and Anna-Clair. Tom was also a highly successful business executive and had many other credits to his name.

Mr. Speaker, Tom Burnett, Jr., will always be remembered both as a great and a good man who loved his family and loved America. As Tom, Sr., said, "There weren't many shades of gray in Tommy. He was loyal to his country and loyal to his family and he knew right from wrong."

The people of Bloomington, Minnesota, Tom Burnett's hometown, have honored Tom's memory in several lasting ways. On the Friday after the September 11 attacks, the Bloomington Jefferson High School football team wore Tom's number 10 on their helmets. On this coming Thursday at Bloomington Stadium when Jefferson plays crosstown rival Bloomington Kennedy, Tom's jersey number will be retired. A memorial scholarship fund has been established in Tom Burnett's honor, and a collection of Tom's favorite books was placed in his former high school's media center. A white oak tree was planted in Tom Burnett's honor in front of his home church, St. Edward's Catholic Church in Bloomington, where Tom was confirmed and where his funeral was held.

A large fieldstone was placed in front of the tree with the words from the Book of John, Chapter 15, verse 13, "There is no greater love than to lay down one's life for one's friend." Mr. Speaker, that says it all about Tom Burnett, Jr.

Tom's ultimate sacrifice will never be forgotten by his family, his community and his grateful Nation. Tom Burnett, Sr., fondly remembers a conversation with his son on the 50th anniversary of the D-day invasion in France when Tom, Jr., prophetically wondered out loud whether he, Tom Burnett, Jr., would have had the same level of courage those soldiers had during the invasion of Normandy Beach. On September 11, Tom, Jr., was tested and he certainly showed that level of courage, courage that inspires all of us today, courage of an American hero.

Our Nation owes a deep debt of gratitude for Tom Burnett's bravery on September 11. Naming a post office in Tom Burnett's hometown in Bloomington, Minnesota is one meaningful and lasting way Congress and the President can honor his heroism and his memory. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation to rename the West Bloomington Post Office the Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSTAD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend congratulations to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD) for this very important resolution.

He mentioned the fact that Flight 93 was destined to come to this building. And as we rapidly approach the anniversary of September 11, we know that this Capitol dome is a symbol, not only here in the United States, but to the entire world, of freedom. So the sacrifice that Tom Burnett and the others on Flight 93 made is something that is very, very worth recognizing, and I think that naming this post office is a very appropriate effort that the gentleman has put into place here. And I would simply like to congratulate my friend for what he has done here.

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from California, my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, for his very, very kind and thoughtful remarks.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I also would like to thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD) for his moving tribute and for introducing this legislation. We do believe it is quite appropriate, in a very small way, as a matter of fact, to dedicate and name this post office for Tom Burnett who is a hero to all of us. So I ask adoption of this measure by this House.

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5207, a bill to designate a post office in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the Thomas E. Burnett, Jr., Post Office Building. This legislation reflects the spirit of the American people in the aftermath of last year's terrorist attacks, to honor a man that we know to be a hero, who used the last few precious minutes of his own life to save the lives of so many others. I am fortunate to have been able to serve Tom Burnett as his U.S. Representative.

The American people will forever remember Thomas Burnett as a hero. But to his wife, parents, three daughters and loved ones, he was a man of courage and strength long before September 11, 2001.

Tom Burnett grew up in Bloomington, Minnesota, as a child who loved sports and the outdoors. From fishing with his dad, to becoming the star quarterback in high school, Tom was the image of an athlete and the all-American guy. After studying at the Air Force Academy and later graduating from Pepperdine University, he went on to become a senior executive of a company that makes medical devices.

Then, on September 11, the all-American guy became the all-American hero. Thomas Burnett and others aboard made the decision to take down the plane somewhere above Stonycreek Township, Pennsylvania, after learning of the fates of the three hijacked aircraft.

That morning, Tom Burnett called his wife Deena repeatedly, pumping her for information. Later, it was no surprise to her that Tom led the effort to bring the plane down before it could take more lives.

But the result was that thanks to the bravery of people like Tom Burnett, countless innocent lives were saved, including our own, and our nation's Capitol was spared.

Many believe terrorists were going to use the fourth plane, Flight 93, as a weapon to crash into another site in Washington, DC. Whether it was the United States Capitol Building or the White House, we will never know.

This was the ultimate act of bravery and sacrifice from the passengers and crew of United Flight 93, and those who enter our nation's Capitol each day should cherish their valiance.

As the day approaches that will mark the first anniversary of the terrorist attacks, we should all step back for a moment to remember why it may be that our nation's Capitol still stands today, or why the White House remains untouched.

It was because of the courage of Tom Burnett and others, truly among the great heroes of our nation.

There may never be answers for all the questions that surround the events of September 11, 2001, or closure for all of those around the world who suffered the loss of loved ones in this tragedy.

But it is in our power to make sure that we appropriately honor Thomas E. Burnett, Jr., and our other fellow Americans who suddenly became heroes on September 11. Let us thank and remember him by passing this legislation.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5207.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 94.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution expresses the sense of the House of Representatives in recognizing the contributions, heroic achievements and dedicated work of Venus and Serena Williams.

Venus and Serena Williams are only 22 and 20 years of age, respectively, yet they have broken racial and socio-economic barriers with pride and poise by showing the world that tennis is a sport for all people.

Mr. Speaker, Venus and Serena Williams have inspired and encouraged people of all backgrounds and ages, especially those in their hometown of Compton, California. Venus and Serena Williams demonstrate that the spirit of sports, education and a good work ethic, as well as team work, fortitude and determination, are essential ingredients for success.

Venus and Serena Williams are African American role models. Their father coached them to excellence. They were encouraged by both parents to be leaders, to demonstrate high moral and ethical standards, to value education, and to never stray from those family values. Venus and Serena Williams have accomplished many firsts in tennis. Their firsts include being the first sisters in professional tennis history to each win a grand slam singles title and being the first sisters to compete against one another in a Women's Tennis Association tour final.

Venus and Serena Williams have been beacons of light to their community, passing out tennis rackets and conducting tennis clinics for low-income children and raising funds for community development. Venus and Serena Williams joined our national leaders in support of the Department of Transportation's seatbelt campaign, Buckle Up America.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that the House recognize the dedicated work and outstanding accomplishments of Venus and Serena Williams today. I ask that all Members support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, July 6, 2002, Serena and Venus Williams captured first and second places in the ladies' singles championship at Wimbledon. The very next day the sisters went on to win first place in the ladies' doubles championship for the second time in three years. Today Venus and Serena are making their way to the U.S. Open quarters in Flushing Meadows on Arthur Ashe Stadium Court and possibly another victory.

Venus and Serena Williams are the youngest of five sisters. Venus broke into the professional women's tennis circuit at the age of just 14. Coached by their father Richard, the sisters learned to play tennis on the courts of Compton, California. Both girls entered the world of professional tennis at the age of 14. At just 18, Serena won her first grand slam title. Venus won her first grand slam the following year at just 20 years of age. Since winning their first grand slam titles both sisters have broken innumerable records. Between Serena and Venus, they have won 16 singles titles in the last year and 7 of the last 12 grand slam events.

Serena Williams is only the second African American woman to ever win a grand slam, while Venus is the first African American woman to win at Wimbledon since 1958.

In 1999, for the first time in over 115 years, sisters met in the finals at Wimbledon. In September of that same year, Serena was named female athlete of the month by the United States Olympic Committee. Venus is the first United States woman since 1924 to win Olympic gold in both the singles and doubles tournaments. These are only a few of the sisters' many accomplishments in their lives. Serena and Venus Williams strive to make a difference both on and off the court. The sisters support and participate in events sponsored by Oracene Williams Learning Foundation, an organization that seeks to help children with learning disabilities.

Additionally, in 1995, Venus, Serena and Richard Williams conducted a clinic with the California Tennis Association for underprivileged youth. This clinic has since developed into a full year tutoring tennis academy for the underprivileged youth in California. Venus and Serena Williams have become role models for many African American children. In Monday's Washington Post, columnist Courtland Milloy noted the impact the sisters have had on the Means sisters, four sisters aged 8 through 12, who live here in Washington, D.C. The Means sisters play tennis and do after-school work at the Southeast Tennis and Learning Center in the District of Columbia. When asked about what impact Serena and Venus Williams have had on their lives, the Means sisters were quoted as saying, "They show us we can compete against one another and still be friends. They let us see ourselves as champions. We might even end up being number one, two, three and four."

House Resolution 94 congratulates the Williams sisters for all of their dedication and extraordinary accomplishments, and I join with my colleague, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD), in not only supporting this resolution, but in commending the Williams sisters, who did not choose to be sisters, but have in fact chosen to be friends and champions.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1615

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests to speak, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 4½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD), the originator of this resolution.

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my dear friend the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and my dear friend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) for helping to usher this to the floor, along with my thanks to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), who helped to ensure this piece of legislation came to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise today to respect the two outstanding young women who have taken the tennis courts by storm. They happen to be my former constituents from the City of Compton.

I first introduced this bill in March of 2001 expressing the sense of Congress in its admiration of the achievements of these two remarkable sisters, Venus and Serena Williams, tennis champions and first class human beings. I am pleased that hundreds of my esteemed colleagues have agreed to cosponsor this measure with me.

Since this measure was introduced, another year has only brought added luster to Venus' and Serena's professional triumphs. They are the first sisters in the history of the Women's Tennis Association tour to attain number one and two ranking, and of course, they are the first Americans to achieve this exalted status. This alone should encourage us to acknowledge their prowess and courage on the courts which follows the illustrious and historic achievements of the African American tennis champion Althea Gibson in the 1950s.

As of July 9, Serena Williams moved to number one in the WTA tour ranking after winning the French Open and the women's Wimbledon title and is the 11th woman to hold this title since the ranking system began in 1975.

Venus Williams has moved to number two after having held three stints at number one for a total of 11 weeks since February.

On July 7, at Wimbledon, the sisters united to win their second doubles title victory in 3 years.

However, in saluting these remarkable young women and their achievements in the sport of tennis we must not lose sight of the other contributions of these sisters as citizens. We must also give recognition to their parents, Oracene and Richard Williams, who had the foresight to see their daughters as winners and the sacrifice to make this attainment possible. By this recognition, too, we celebrate the African American family and its demonstration of solidarity, initiative and resolve.

In particular, though, Mr. Speaker, the unselfish coaching of their father, Richard Williams, of his daughters over many years that provided both a healthy sense of self-regard and a sense of confidence must be commended. This outstanding father, who knew not how to coach, had never coached in his life, took this on. He saw the talents in his young daughters, and he coached them through the streets and through the hard cement courts of Compton to bring them to where they are today.

From those cement courts of Compton to the grass groomed courts of Wimbledon, Serena and Venus Williams have triumphed over an enormous scale, but we should also salute them because they are giving back and sharing their prosperity and talent with children from minority communities in our country, as well as in Africa's impoverished neighborhoods, which they will soon be traveling to.

In Los Angeles, many inner city high school players are advancing in the game of tennis due to the support of the Venus and Serena Williams Tutorial/Tennis Academy. These students who enroll in the tutorial program also are mentored on college and career possibilities. They see that need as well, Mr. Speaker.

The Williams sisters also support the J.P. Morgan Chase Tennis Challenge, the proceeds of which are directed to the OWL Foundation, which is named after their mother, Oracene Williams Learning Foundation, which was started by their money to provide grants for at-risk students to participate in educational remedial assistance programs. The foundation's mission is to ensure that every child is treated as an individual and provided the opportunity to learn.

Another initiative supported by the sisters and Doublemint provides grants to recognize the contributions that college students and student service organizations make on campuses and in communities.

Mr. Speaker, Serena and Venus were also instrumental in assisting the founding of the Southeast Tennis and Learning Center in Washington, D.C., and helped to open this extensive facility in April of last year.

Mr. Speaker, on and off the courts Venus and Serena Williams are indeed giving back, and we should take pride and pleasure in their accomplishments and salute them for their fine sportsmanlike or sportswomanlike conduct and citizenship.

I cannot say enough about these outstanding two young women who happen to be black but indeed are outstanding citizens to this America, and for that, Mr. Speaker, I salute them and ask for a successful passage.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), a great athlete, former coach, great dancer, great African American, great humanitarian and legislator.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, first of all, for his great oratorical skills as well as his academic prowess.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD) and her colleagues on the other side of the aisle who have seen to it, specifically the gentlewoman from California (Ms.

MILLENDER-MCDONALD), who just persevered and kept pushing this resolution when many thought it would never come to the floor.

I am glad that it is here, Mr. Speaker, because it speaks very loudly for this Congress to see the advent of these two young women who belie many of the stereotypical ideas about African Americans when it comes to sports such as tennis. They have shown America and shown the world that with their long muscle prowess and their beauty and their grace and just the refinement which they have shown and the femininity is great for America.

That is why I want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) and commend her for this. Mr. Speaker, Venus and Serena, they are great tennis champions, but they are even more than that, Mr. Speaker, because what they are doing is legendary and has turned around the tennis world.

I am, as my good friend from Illinois mentioned, an old athlete. I remember when black women had a very difficult time in tennis. I remember two other Williams sisters, very, very old from Wilberforce, Ohio. Wilberforce was one of the first universities that really pushed tennis for African Americans, and these two Williams sisters were there. I was in school with Althea Gibson, who rose to great heights in the tennis world and was recently honored by the Republican Party and the Speaker down at one of the women's groups here. That to me was a great thing as well.

I look forward to this kind of honor for women athletes who have been able to really persevere and come forward in the sports world.

These two women are wonderful women because they are tremendously talented and they make role models for other women, not only African American women but women of all races, colors, creeds, and they have come to this achievement and they have come to it with grace, and when we see them on television and see them being interviewed, we can see the grace, politeness and intelligence and confidence and good humor, and we can see the beauty. We can see why her name is Venus because, in mythology, Venus was a beautiful and strong woman. She was not small of build either. She was well-appropriated, and so is Venus. It is good to see this in tennis here in America, and I want to compliment them for another thing.

They have made the black family look better because stereotypically people do not believe many times that the black family is strong but it is. Here is a father, a father, as my good colleagues have said, who has shown that there is perseverance, there is tenacity, there is this family connection, and it can be spent in strengthening the American family, and athletics is one way it can be strengthened. Scholarship and good skills is another.

Mr. Speaker, I could say a lot more, but that is good. I just want to say that these two women have shown America that. It has gotten a message to America and has done us all proud.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman from Florida for her history of female athletics, and it is my pleasure to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CUMMINGS).

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time, and I thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) for sponsoring this resolution and certainly the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN).

Mr. Speaker, we have heard already the great achievements of these two wonderful young ladies, and I cannot help but think about the words of Swindall, the great theologian, when he said that so often people do things which are unnoticed, unseen, unappreciated and unapplauded, and the fact is that so often they do these things quietly, and then there comes a time when all of that hard work and all of that effort and all the things that they have done behind closed doors and behind closed walls suddenly emerges into the spotlight of the sun.

We have two wonderful young ladies here who have worked very hard, and it has already been said, worked hard within a family structure, a father who stood up for them over and over and over again, who saw in them so much. He had a vision, Mr. Speaker, but not only did he have a vision, he turned the vision into a mission. So often what happens is that folks have visions but they never do anything with it, but he saw in these two wonderful ladies something that would be great, and in other words, what he saw and if others, Mr. Speaker, had told him many years ago that his daughters would achieve all these things, some people may have considered it the impossible, but Richard was about the business of doing the impossible and he did. So I come here to salute these wonderful ladies.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest moments of my life came at Howard University's graduation just this May when Venus Williams was being awarded a special award by the president of the university, and she really literally took all of our breaths away when she got up and she spoke about her sisters who had graduated from my alma mater, by the way, Howard University, and then she said something that really struck everybody in the audience. She said, "They say I am worth millions, but I would give every penny I have got if I could walk across the stage like you are doing today," talking to the graduates, and I think that really touched everybody and put everything into context. One of the things she also said is that "I have been busy playing tennis and making money, but I am going to return and make sure I get my degree."

So it is that kind of spirit. It is a spirit that Swindall talks about, unnoticed, unappreciated, unapplauded and unseen, and so they are now in the sunlight of life, and they have so much to give and so many people to inspire, so many little girls looking up to them, and by the way, little boys also looking up to them. We salute them today and may God bless these great ladies.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Watson).

Ms. WATSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 94, honoring the sisters Venus and Serena. Congratulations are indeed in order for these champions. My colleagues have already outlined some of the outstanding accomplishments that these two young women from Compton, California, have achieved, and I too pay my respects to the number one and the number two ranked Women's Tennis Association players in the world.

These young adults have created many first-time achievements for American women in world tennis. Their skill, charisma, dedication, plus love for the sport herald an exciting era in women's tennis.

Venus and Serena have shown not only athletic dominance on the court but social consciousness and mature contributions off the court and have made wise contributions of not only their time but their money as well.

The Williams sisters who grew up in Compton, California, have overcome considerable odds to excel in their chosen sport.

□ 1630

Their accomplishments similar to those of Tiger Woods in golf prove that with hard work, dedication, the right kind of guidance, and nurturing, all Americans can achieve and succeed in activities and careers that have been traditionally reserved for those with a higher economic status. The Williams sisters exemplify this and have smashed many contemporary barriers, providing a beacon of light for all Americans; and so many people have said this could not be done. I commend Venus and Serena for their past deeds and look forward to what their future brings, and we will enjoy the seeds that they have sown across America for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to cosponsor H. Res. 94.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I know that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) was trying to get in before we closed. He is a great tennis player himself and has been playing a long time.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to commend the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) for her sensitivity in bringing this legislation before us, and I also want to express my appreciation for the opportunity to work with the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA). It is always indeed a pleasure to work with her, and I thank her so much.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of our time.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

In closing, I also want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD), my friend, for introducing this resolution. It does say a lot to the fact that people can make a difference and inspire others to great heights. So I urge adoption of this measure.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor the achievements and determination of Venus and Serena Williams. These two young women 20 and 19 years old respectively are only in their sixth and third full years as professional tennis players and they have over 43 professional titles between them.

Venus Williams is the first African-American woman to win the Wimbledon Championships since 1958 and she is the first United States woman since 1924 to win an Olympic gold medal in both singles and doubles. She also holds the women's world record for the fastest serve at 127 miles per hour, and is one of only seven women to win the singles titles in both the Wimbledon Championship and the U.S. Open in the same year.

Serena Williams is only the second African-American woman ever to win a Grand Slam singles title and is only the sixth American woman to win the U.S. Open singles title since 1968. Ms. Williams is only the fifth woman to win both singles and doubles Grand Slam titles in the same year, and is the first woman to reach the finals in a U.S. Open debut since 1978.

They are impressive women who overcame social and racial barriers to achieve excellence. Venus and Serena Williams have inspired and encouraged people of all backgrounds and ages, especially those in their hometown of Compton, California, demonstrating through the spirit of sport that education, a good work ethic, teamwork, fortitude, and determination are ingredients for success.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, in viewing the tremendous achievements of tennis players Venus and Serena Williams, once again on display for the pleasure of their many fans at the U.S. Open in my hometown, New York, one must acknowledge the legacy of past trailblazers, the parental roles of Richard and Oracene Williams and the natural ability of tennis's most recent stars.

Tennis pioneers Althea Gibson and Arthur Ashe successfully gained national and international status despite legal and customary exclusion of African-Americans from tennis during most of the 20th century. In 1951 Althea Gibson was the first African-American of either gender to play in U.S. Open and also in 1951 she became the first black American to play at Wimbledon. In 1957 Gibson made history by winning the Wimbledon singles and doubles championships. Breaking ground in the game of tennis, she also became the first Black female to be on the cover of Sports Illustrated. Despite the confines of race, gender, and class, she transcended the role of black female athletics and became a spokesperson for racial equality and inclusion by challenging racial segregation in American society. By challenging and ultimately transforming the racial and social climate in sports, Gibson created a legacy and opened opportunity for future black tennis players. Similar to the achievements of Gibson, Richmond, Virginia native Arthur Ashe rose to prominence in tennis. Noted for his grace, hard-hit topspin, and outstanding backhand, Ashe won the 1968 U.S. Open, the Australian Open, and the Wimbledon title in 1975.

Following in a great tennis legacy, Venus and Serena Williams have also made history by becoming the first sisters to win Grand Slam crowns individually and collectively in the 20th century.

Almost fifteen years ago, Richard Williams stood on a crumbling tennis court in Compton, California and told his daughter Venus that she was going to be one of the best tennis players in the world. For Williams, a neighborhood tennis coach, this was a bold and idealistic vision because no Black person had excelled in the game since tennis greats Althea Gibson and Arthur Ashe. However, despite the odds and the inability to provide expensive and private tennis lessons, Williams and his wife recognized and nurtured the natural ability of Venus and her youngest sister Serena. Similar to the challenges faced by Gibson and Ashe, the issues of race and class were always prevalent in their matches against white competitors. In meeting those obstacles, their parents fostered a work ethic that encouraged them to play aggressively and to always strive to be the best. While catering to their talents, the Williams also valued the education of their daughters and did not allow their schooling to take a back seat. Unlike some parents who sacrificed schooling for competitions, the Williams strongly advocated education and viewed it as a top priority. By instilling a victorious attitude, value in education, and graceful demeanors, Richard and Oracene Williams have given sports and the world two talented athletes and young women who are true role models.

Considered the most dominant players in recent tennis history, Venus and Serena Williams have revolutionized and literally transformed the sport with forty-three professional titles between them. Venus and Serena have broken racial and socio-economic barriers with pride and poise by illustrating to the world that tennis is a sport for all people. The pair made history by becoming the first African-Americans to win national and international titles since tennis pioneers Althea Gibson and Arthur Ashe.

Claiming her first Grand Slam victory in 2000 at the age of twenty, Venus Williams became the first African-American female champion at Wimbledon since Gibson in 1957 and 1958. Elevating her game to the next level, Venus is the first American woman since 1924 to win an Olympic gold medal in both singles and doubles. She holds the women's record for the fastest serve at 127 miles per hour, and is one of the seven women to win the singles title in both the Wimbledon Champions and the U.S. Open in 2000 and 2001.

Creating history in her own right, Serena Williams is currently the number one ranking female tennis player. Following in the footsteps of her older sister, Serena is only the second African-American woman ever to win a Grand Slam singles title. She is also the sixth American woman to win the U.S. Open singles title since 1968 and is the fifth woman to win both singles and doubles Grand Slam titles in 2002.

Among other note-worthy titles, the sisters are the first in professional tennis history to each win a Grand Slam singles, the first to be ranked in the top ten simultaneously since 1991, the first to win a Grand Slam doubles title together, the first to compete against one another in Women's Tennis Association Tour Final, and the first to win an Olympic gold medal in doubles together. Recently, rated the numbers one and two women players in professional tennis, the Williams sisters have broken ground in rewriting tennis history with their historic wins.

Inspiring and encouraging thousands of young players from different racial and socioeconomic backgrounds, Venus and Serena have become role models for young women of their generation. They have gracefully illustrated and proven that through hard work, dedication, teamwork, and determination all dreams can be achieved. Moreover, the sisters have embraced the notion that high moral and ethical standards and strong family values are the ingredients to success. Putting rhetoric with action, the Williams sisters are actively engaged in encouraging young people in minority communities to become interested in tennis. They are opening doors of opportunity in tennis for young people of color all over this nation and as a result of their work will leave a living legacy of young champions of color in the years to come.

In viewing their accomplishments, the Williams sisters have continued the long tradition and outstanding achievements of blacks in tennis. Furthermore, they have shown the world the continued legacy of Blacks in tennis, the spirit of sportsmanship, and the gift of serving and encouraging young people around the world.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of H. Res. 94, a resolution honoring the contributions and accomplishments of tennis stars Venus and Serena Williams.

To say that Venus and Serena Williams are trailblazers would be an enormous understatement. The first sisters ever to be ranked number one and two in women's tennis, they have achieved a feat worthy of congressional recognition and international praise.

The Williams sisters first came to the public's attention in 1997 shortly after they began their road to becoming a tennis powerhouse. During that year, the sisters lost nearly every game they played and despite the media attention and the multi-million dollar endorsements, a long-term career in tennis looked bleak. However, within five years these two young ladies managed to propel themselves to arguably become the best women tennis players and most recognized of all time, winning more than seven Grand Slam titles between the two of them.

Mr. Speaker, in their efforts to establish themselves as great athletes, they also established themselves as great role models. Through the Venus and Serena Williams Tutorial/Tennis Academy each year their foundation helps more than 40 inner city kids through the workings of after school programs, summer tennis camps, mentoring, and cultural enrichment education. As a result now more than ever, young African American children are playing sports and participating in programs traditionally played by whites.

With Venus and Serena's performance at the U.S. Open this week, I cannot think of a more fitting time for this resolution to come before the House of Representatives. They have shown and continue to show their dedication to their career and community. They are young leaders who have vowed to take the world by storm, working to defeat everyone in their path so they may reign as tennis champions.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 94.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. HULSHOF) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. HULSHOF).

Mr. HULSHOF. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is back-to-school time. Indeed, as I look at the clock above the Speaker's chair, in about 2 hours when we call for votes, this Chamber will fill with our colleagues; and there will be some of the same giddiness as kids going back to school. And the inevitable question we ask one another is what did you do on your summer break?

Certainly I think as we prepare for some very solemn events later this week as well as next week and certainly recognizing the impact of a year ago, I think a lot of attention has caused us to really forget some of the important education initiatives that have passed and become law. Specifically, this Congress began last year with a renewed commitment to education. "Leave no child behind" has become a familiar mantra. In fact that landmark legislation of leaving no child behind is now the law of the land and really starts with the mindset that a child, any child, can learn.

As President Bush stated, indeed as Governor of the State of Texas, "The Federal Government must be humble enough to stay out of the day-to-day operation of local schools, wise enough to give State and local school districts more authority and freedom, and strong enough to require results. We must make our schools worthy of all of our children. Whatever their background, their cause is our cause. It must not be lost."

Thereupon we came together in a very bipartisan way and passed that landmark legislation. But Congress did not stop there. Last summer in the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act, there were some significant tax incentives to improve the affordability of education, not just higher education but kindergarten through elementary school, through secondary, essentially schoolchildren of all ages that would be able to take advantage of through their parents or other mentors or family members, opportunities of savings vehicles and incentives through the Tax Code.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, as you know and as this body knows, a year ago when we enacted the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act, because of some very technical, arcane procedural rules in the other body, there was a sunset provision placed upon those tax incentives relating to education. What this bill today, H.R. 5203, attempts to do is to make permanent those positive savings vehicles, those tax incentives that would help all parents across the country really focus on their children's education.

Certainly, as we debated this a year ago, the idea is a simple one. No child should be discriminated against because of the choice of where he or she goes to school. Public schools, private schools, religious schools, home schools, any child should have the advantage of these tax incentives through parents or other mentors as far as educational expenses.

We cannot in Congress, of course, set tuition rates. We cannot set student fees. In my hometown of Columbia, Missouri, as college students are coming back, they are lamenting the fact that they are facing an 8 percent tuition hike this year. There is nothing that not only this legislative body but other State legislatures can do as far as the rising cost of tuition. However, we have acted as far as making college education and other educational expenses more affordable, education more accessible. It is time to make those provisions in the Tax Code permanent, those tax relief measures. This body has acted making the entire Economic Tax Reconciliation Act of 2001 permanent. We have also acted as a body to make those pension opportunities permanent, the marriage penalty repeal permanent as well as the death tax repeal. We believe it is time for Congress to make a renewed commitment to make permanent the education tax incentives. Accordingly, I ask that H.R. 5203 be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

It is nice to be back here on the first day of school to witness the 27th act of the Republican budget follies of 2001–2002. The gentleman from Missouri talks very openly about the No Child Must Be Left Behind bill, and we all clapped and patted ourselves on the back. It authorized an increase in the budget of 15 percent for children and education. But then there was the budget, the real honest-to-God budget. That was 2.8 percent. Promising 15 percent and then giving them 2.8, right? And meanwhile come down here and shovel more money out the back door in tax breaks.

You call it arcane reasoning. Well, we did not want to break the budget. That is why you did not make it permanent in the first place. If you had passed this thing in perpetuity, you would have broken the budget, and it never would have passed the Senate. That is why you put that sunset clause in.
